Fascinating Facts 6.10.23

Yosseleh Rosenblatt and Chaim Yosef Friedman in concert.

Cantor Yossele Rosenblatt was born in 1882 in a small Ukrainian town, in a house with a dirt floor. By the 1920s, he was a superstar cantor in the United States, often mentioned in the same breath as opera great Enrico Caruso. Reviewers sometimes described Rosenblatt as a man with two, even three voices: a warm baritone, a ringing tenor, and a shimmering falsetto. He was known for his extraordinary technique, for the sweetness of his timbre, and for his unique ability to transition from normal voice to falsetto with hardly any noticeable break at all. Notes were hit remarkably accurately at high speeds. Fiorituras, similarly, were struck near perfectly, both rhythmically and on pitch.

But by the time he was 8 years old, he was being paid to sing at synagogues throughout Eastern Europe. He emigrated to New York in 1912, and when Rosenblatt sang, the synagogue was jam-packed. Every seat, every aisle was filled, everyone there to hear the little man with the full dark beard. Rosenblatt's' extensive recording career earned him exposure beyond the Jewish community, and his relentless schedule of concerts took him around the country and across Europe. His fame spread so far that Toscanini appealed to him to sing the leading role in Fromental Halévy's La Juive, but Rosenblatt replied that he would only use his vocal gift for the glory of G-d, in service to his religion. Notably, he turned down a "Golden Hello" from the Chicago opera house because it violated his religious principles. He didn't want to play a fictional character, wear makeup or sing onstage with women. Because of that, his engagements doubled and tripled. People wanted to hear and see this cantor who turned down, in 1918, a thousand dollars a night to sing.

A few years later, Rosenblatt turned down $100,000 to play a part in the first talking picture, The Jazz Singer, for the same reasons that he said no to the opera. Still, Warner Brothers had to have him. So, they threw a scene into the movie where Rosenblatt, playing himself, appears in concert. Sometime around 1930 Rosenblatt's tour brought him to Minneapolis. The great synagogue which seated over 1000 was packed to the third balcony. In attendance were Arye Leib Friedman and his son Chaim Yosef a"h. Cantor Rosenblatt told the audience that he had not yet davened Maariv. Therefore, he would daven Maariv and invited the audience to listen in. My grandfather turned to my father and said "have you davened Maariv yet"? My father answered in the negative. "So, daven now". My grandfather then saw to it that his son davened Maariv with Yossele Rosenblatt in concert in Minneapolis MN. On 24 Sivan 1933, Yossele Rosenblatt died in Palestine at the age of 51 of a heart attack while filming a movie.
