PARSHA QUESTIONS OF THE WEEK

THE MISHKAN

The term "Mishkan" (25:9) is generally used in reference to the Tabernacle, the travelling Temple of the Jewish People in the desert. Yet we also find it specifically used (26:1) with regard to the innermost curtain that covered the Tabernacle. Why does the curtain have this distinction of being the "title object" of the entire Temple? Rashi points out that this curtain fit not only over the roof, but over the outside walls of the building as well, such that it can be seen as the building itself. Yet it is noteworthy that those standing outside the building would not see the Mishkan at all, because it was covered in turn by two more weather-resistant covers. Those standing inside would only see the ceiling covering, while the visible walls were the gold-covered beams. Why then do we give this curtain such prominence within the structure?

Note as well that when David declares his intention to build the Temple in Jerusalem, his motivation is expressed as follows (Shmuel II 7:2): "Behold I am sitting in a home built of cedarwood, while the Ark of G-d sits in a curtain."

HALACHA OF THE WEEK BY RABBI MORDY POLLOCK

THE MELACHA OF BORER II!

We began our discussion of borer by defining borer as sorting or selecting from a mixture of different types of items. Last week, we explained what a halachic mixture is. This week, we will discuss what constitutes different types of items. There are two factors that determine whether different items are halachically considered different types. The first factor is taste. Any items that have distinctly different tastes are considered different types, even if they are alike in other ways. (Obviously, this factor only applies to food items.) For example, roasted and fried chicken, rare and well done meat, and slices of different types of cake are all examples of similar items that have distinctly different tastes, so sorting or selecting from a mixture of these items would constitute borer.

The second factor is function. Any items (food or nonfood) that serve different functions are considered different types. For example, kosher and non-kosher candies (even of the same flavor), or teaspoons and tablespoons are considered different types because they serve different functions, and cannot be used for the same purpose. In the same vein, similar items that are only different in size, color, shape, weight, etc. will only be considered different types if those differences affect their function. For example, identical shirts of different sizes are considered different types because different sized shirts don’t serve the same function.
