PARSHA QUESTS

By Rabbi Moshe Hauer

Fathers & Daughters

Our Parsha begins with the laws of vows, teaching us both how a vow is made, and how it may be annulled. Thus the Torah describes relationships within which one may override a vow of the other, including a husband vetoing certain vows made by his wife, and a father vetoing vows made by his minor daughter. It is clear, however, that the father's power does not derive simply from the fact that his daughter is a minor, as he holds no similar power relative to his minor sons. It seems to be a function of the father-daughter relationship. Indeed in Torah generally, while a minor son may have certain limitations on his own independent ability to accomplish, the father does not assume these abilities in place of the son. On the other hand in the case of a daughter the father exercises domain over certain aspects of her life, until she reaches adulthood, i.e. independence from him. Examples of the father's domain over his minor daughter include his ability to marry her off, to claim her income for himself, and to override her vows. What is the basis of this power of the father and why is it limited to his daughters?

KOLLEL KORNER

By Rabbi AJ Esral

The 'What' of Judaism Eretz Yisrael

As much as we love and cherish Eretz Yisrael, it is fair to say that, on balance, we spend many more resources on teaching Torah in some form or another than we do on learning about and relating to Eretz Yisrael. Everyone knows about all the shiurim that take place at BJSZ, but few people even know that Rabbi Rose has a podcast called Chibas Ha'aretz and that I have been waiting for the next episode for many months now.

And not for nothing: we've lived in galus for thousands of years now, whereas the world cannot exist for even a single moment without someone, somewhere, learning Torah.

Which makes it all the more notable why all of Hashem's promises to the Avos and Moshe seem to revolve around Eretz Yisrael. Time and again, Hashem appears to each of them and promises to bring their children to the Promised Land, which flows with milk and honey. Wouldn't you imagine that, given the centrality of Torah in our lives, that should be the promise instead? Or, framed differently, what is it that the land represents in the context of our eternal relationship with Hashem that Torah doesn't?

Caring Connections

In our continuing effort to look after the members of our shul, we want to be sure we are caring for those ill, homebound or otherwise in need of our attention. If you notice someone missing from their usual seat in shul or know of someone who is ill, please do two things:

- 1) Call them to let them know they were missed.
- 2) Please email Marlene Daniel, marlenewdaniel@gmail.com, the chair of our Caring Connections Committee, so she can coordinate volunteers to visit and assist when needed.

If you know of someone from shul that would benefit from having a meal delivered, please tell them about our Cook and Care program and reach out to Rebbetzin Rose at yochevedrose@gmail.com.
