The Power of Community

The Mishnaic equivalent of “there is strength in numbers” is the following saying from Pirkei Avot: You shall not separate yourself from the community. Embedded in this phrase is the reminder that the community depends upon our presence, and similarly, we depend upon the community. To identify as part of the Jewish people without engaging in community is to find ourselves adrift, particularly in times we need the strength of others.

Since October 7th, we have seen the power of community coming together. Our Friday evening worship services have more attendees both in person and online; our adult education classes are fuller than usual; and remarkably we have one of the largest conversion classes in recent history this semester. We had over 300 people from across the community—Jews and those of other faiths—come together for two nights of learning about antisemitism with Brendan Murphy. We have seen numerous members of churches and interfaith partners come in solidarity to our services and classes—we know we are not alone when we feel the presence of the larger Atlanta community.

When we feel under attack, as we do both with the war in Israel and the increased antisemitism here at home, we need community. Separating ourselves from our community will not make us happier or safer; rather, this is exactly the time we need to come together as a Temple family in solidarity and strength.

Many of us already know the power of community to give us strength, as we have been lifted up by our fellow Temple members in times of illness or mourning. Anyone who has received chicken soup and challah from Caring at The Temple, or a call from clergy or staff, knows that even a small act of community can make us feel less alone. When we meet to talk about antisemitism before services, I witness the power of people sharing their experiences and fears in a safe space, leaving that time feeling less isolated and more empowered.

Community also is important in times of joy. One of the biggest tasks for us in the shadow of October 7th is to embrace the joy of Judaism and community. Those in Israel rush to bomb shelters at a moment’s notice. We can come together in relative safety and peace and thus have the obligation to do so. Every baby naming, b’nei mitzvah, conversion, wedding...every Shabbat service or Sunday morning BEC or education class, is an act of protest against those who seek to make us afraid or unwelcome. Our gift to one another and to the global Jewish community is to do our part to embrace the joy so we have strength to be there for the difficult times that threaten to overwhelm us. We do this for us, and we do this to model this resilience for the younger generations.

It is in that spirit that I find myself approaching my daughter’s bat mitzvah. For all of the heaviness of the world and my worries about Israel and antisemitism, I find respite in the preparations for this milestone. To see her be called to the Torah in the same sanctuary we announced we were pregnant 13 years ago, in the presence of so many who have watched her (and us!) grow over these years, is a reminder of the strength of Jewish tradition and the power of sharing our lives with this community. Every Shabbat service or Sunday morning BEC or education class, is an act of protest against those who seek to make us afraid or unwelcome. Our gift to one another and to the global Jewish community is to do our part to embrace the joy so we have strength to be there for the difficult times that threaten to overwhelm us. We do this for us, and we do this to model this resilience for the younger generations.

Our Temple’s vision and values statement says: We need each other. Today that could not be more true. In these times of existential threats on top of the everyday uncertainty of life, we need each other to support us and help us feel less alone. And, with one another’s help, we also embrace the joy and the hope it gives us for the future.

May the One Who brings peace to the heavens bring peace upon all Israel and all of the world.

Antisemitism Task Force
We are all now living in the post-October 7th Jewish world. We see heightened antisemitism, have deep concern about Israel and its war against Hamas and we feel loneliness, fear and confusion. What are WE supposed to do?

The Temple has responded with compassion, empathy and information. While there are so many ways to address this current crisis, it’s The Temple that can best focus on our congregants – our sacred community where we have always come together to worship, learn and be proud to be Jewish. The clergy have held listening sessions, educational opportunities, and outreach to families. And will continue to do so. The Temple is here to provide a safe, caring and supportive place and community for all to have shelter from the rising antisemitism. There is also another group within The Temple that is involved—The Temple Antisemitism Task Force.

We’re here to organize our efforts on behalf of our congregants as we all stand together against antisemitism. We are a group of congregants, mentored by Rabbi Lapidus, who have our congregants’ needs as our sharp focus. To be effective, we’ve organized our work along four themes:

Listen:
Bring congregants together to help each other deal with the personal impact of both October 7th and the recent spike in antisemitism on themselves and their families. We know so many are seeking guidance from our clergy and from Jewish wisdom in these unprecedented times in the American Jewish experience. Listening sessions have been held for people or groups to come together and seek community and share feelings, most recently at 5:15 pm on Friday evenings before Shabbat services. These will continue.

Learn:
Knowledge can counter fear and we’re responding by leveraging Temple resources with educational opportunities for our congregants to understand antisemitism in the past as well as in our current time, and to better understand the complexity of the Middle East. These will continue.

Advocate:
We are stronger as one voice, so The Temple is providing opportunities for congregants to raise our voices in support of our Jewish community and policies and partner with others whose missions have strong advocacy efforts. These will continue.

Communicate:
Through the full spectrum of Temple communications outlets, we are seeking to give our diverse congregants easy access to The Temple’s resources as well as to news outlets and to Jewish organizations who publish articles and analysis about antisemitism and the war in Israel against Hamas. This will continue.

The Antisemitism Task Force is being coordinated by Janet Lavine and Marc Weinberg and a group of committed and impassioned congregants. Rabbi Lapidus serves as the Task Force mentor. Please let us know if you want to join with us, or learn more about how we and The Temple have mobilized to deliver what is uniquely the purpose of our community—listen, learn, advocate and communicate.

RSJI Public Education Group: Backpack Buddies

SPOTLIGHT ON…
RSJI’s Gun Violence Prevention Group
Group Leader:
Lissie Stahlman
Why are you passionate about the Gun Violence Prevention Issue?
More Americans died of gun-related injuries in 2021 than in any other year on record. When you combine murders, suicides and accidental shootings, CDC data shows 48,830 lives lost to firearms in just that one year. Make no mistake: Gun violence is a uniquely American crisis that has reached staggering levels. But there is progress being made and cause for optimism, despite all the negativity and fear. There is significant momentum in Georgia to combat our gun violence epidemic using a public health approach, in much the same way we prevent the spread of infectious disease. The passage of the Federal Bipartisan Safer Communities Act in 2022 suggests compromise is possible around common sense solutions. It implemented changes to the mental health system, school safety programs, and gun control laws, including extended background checks for firearm purchasers under the age of 21, clarification of Federal Firearms License requirements, funding for state red flag laws and other crisis intervention programs, further criminalization of arms trafficking and straw purchases, and partial closure of the boyfriend loophole.

What is one thing your group has accomplished that you are proud of?
I’m proud of forming an interfaith alliance with other houses of worship that has recently folded into the Georgia Majority for Gun Safety. This coalition includes a diverse variety of faith-driven and secular organizations including houses of worship, National Council of Jewish Women, Jewish Community Relations Council, Moms Demand Action, Black Push, Mothers Against Gang Violence and other esteemed organizations.
We have established an alliance with Chris 180, a 42-year-old nonprofit that provides psychological and physical resources to children and families in underserved communities, many of them stricken with gun violence. We will be exploring ways in which we can volunteer and support them. We recently held a “Get to Know Chris 180” panel discussion which sparked much interest.

If someone wants to get involved, what is one upcoming event they might be able to participate in?
Join the Georgia Majority (tinyurl.com/gamajority) and stay tuned for info on bills that may get committee hearings at the Capitol. Also, email Lissie Stahlman at estahlman@gmail.com to be added to our RSJI Gun Violence Prevention list.

If someone wants to learn more about your group’s issue, what is one book, news article, or other reference you would recommend?
Subscribe to The Trace (thetrace.org) which provides excellent information on gun issues nationwide.

Esther Bleich Scholarship Fund
We have a gem at the Temple you may not know about! It’s the Bleich Scholarship Fund. Set up 38 years ago by the late Dr. Jack Bleich in a generous gift to the Temple to honor his mother, Esther, its mission is to help Jewish college students who don’t have all the necessary funds and need a little help to complete a meaningful education. Since its inception in 1980, we are very proud the Bleich Fund has assisted almost three hundred students entering college, during college, or going for graduate degrees, by offering them grants, loans, or a combination of both.

Please call Heather McKerley at 404-873-1731 ext. 1150 at The Temple to receive the necessary paperwork. The deadline for grant/loan applications has been extended to Monday March 15, 2024.
