D'var Torah: Unity, Real Inclusion

Rabbi Andy Shapiro Katz, Director of Engagement, Conservative Yeshiva

The process of building the Mishkan and setting up the Israelite camp comes to a close with Parashat Beha'alotekha, whose first three stories deal with questions of unity and difference, inclusion and exclusion.

It opens with God telling Moshe about how Aharon is to light the 7-branched Menorah. But then in verse 8:4, seemingly out of the blue, we are told: "Now THIS is how the Menorah was made: it was hammered work of gold, hammered from base to petal." But we already knew this from the detailed plans for the Menorah given in Shemot (Exodus)! What does this add and why is it here?

The Sifrei, an early collection of Midrash on Bamidbar (Numbers), notes the odd use of the word "Zeh/This" in 8:4 and explains that despite the detailed plans, Moshe was still confused about how the Menorah should look. In response, God pointed to an image of it and said "ZEH" - THIS is how should make it. With this, Moshe finally understood, as we see from the rest of 8:4: "According to the pattern that the LORD had shown Moshe, so was the Menorah made."

The Torah and the Midrash seem to be emphasizing a point. Despite its distinct parts with their different functions, the Menorah was a single unit made from the same valuable substance. Distinctions, but no hierarchy. Differences, but no disunity. It is as if they want us to have this in mind when reading the next piece of the parasha about the consecration of the Levites for Mishkan service.

The Tribe of Levi occupies a strange position. As we see in Shemot 28, the Kohen Gadol's breastplate had 12 inlaid gemstones, one for each tribe, with Levi explicitly mentioned as one of the 12. And yet, here in Bamidbar when the tribes are counted, the tribe of Joseph is counted as two - Ephraim and Manasseh - and Levi isn't counted at all. Instead, Levi is given a special role in the Mishkan and a central location in the camp. But lest one learn from this that the Levites are a separate entity, either above or below the rest of the Israelites, the Menorah reminds us that even when something has distinct parts that look different or perform special functions - they are still part of a unified whole.

But the rubber meets the road, so to speak, in the next piece of the parasha - that of Pesach Sheni. Everyone (or so we think) does as Moshe commands, making the Pesach sacrifice on the one year anniversary of their redemption from Egypt. But suddenly we learn of a group that, having become ritually impure through contact with a dead body, was barred from offering the sacrifice. They turn to Moshe and say, essentially: What about us?

Moshe could have said: Don't make such a big deal of it; next year you'll have another chance. But instead he hears their pain at being excluded and turns to God for the answer. On the flipside, God could have said: The Pesach sacrifice is so important that ritual impurity doesn't matter; let everyone offer it. But instead, God maintains the distinction and finds a way to overcome it. Those ritually impure on Pesach will have Pesach Sheni one month later - a day on which they can perform the sacrifice just as it had been done by everyone else one month earlier.

We see from this that inclusion is not only about the privilege to perform a meaningful ritual - it is ALSO about the responsibility to do it, and do it right. So even though Pesach Sheni isn't "really" Pesach, God requires the same strictures be observed. And lest one think that anyone can get this second chance, God makes clear that one who COULD perform the Korban Pesach at the preferred time, but chooses not to, is NOT included in Pesach Sheni. In fact, they "bear their guilt" and are to be "cut off from their kin!" The message is clear: include those who, despite their different circumstances, want both the privilege AND the responsibility of being included, but exclude those who, by dishonoring their privilege and shirking their responsibility, exclude themselves.

Pesach Sheni's radical vision bases inclusion on active participation and responsibility, not ethnicity and personal history. All can participate in the unifying act of the Pesach sacrifice, even those neither present for the redemption, nor descended from those who were. God drives this home in verse 9:14 with perhaps the most Jewish expression of inclusion and unity: "There shall be one law for you, whether stranger or citizen of the country."

May we continue to strive to realize this vision, not only where we are strangers, but also where we are citizens, not only in countries where we are the minority, but also where we are the majority. Shabbat Shalom.

Parashat Beha'alotekha Self-Study Vered Hollander-Goldfarb, Conservative Yeshiva Faculty

In this Parasha we feel that we are in the desert, touching on the end of the Mishkan narratives on one hand, and the preparations for going into the land on the other.

1) We open with the instructions to Aaron: He is to light the Menorah (candelabra) in the Mishkan (8:1-4). In a curious step, the Torah not only gives instructions, but tells us about the design of the Menorah, which was very complicated. Why do you think that the Torah tells us this? How did Moshe know how to do?

2) The people are preparing to celebrate their first Pessach (Passover) commemorating leaving Egypt a year earlier (9:1-14). Let's stop and think: How might they feel at this point in time?

3) How did the people know how to travel in the desert (9:15-23)? What do you think are the benefits and the difficulties of being reliant on the cloud to know when (as well as where) to travel?

4) The cloud guided the way in the desert. But in 10:33 we are told that the Ark traveled before the people. What was the message to the people? When the Ark traveled, Moshe had something to say. What was it (10:35-36)? When do we say these lines?

5) After they begin to travel, the people begin to complain (11:4-10). What are they complaining about? Is their complaint justified? Explain.

May He who blessed our ancestors and is the source of all healing bless and heal those who are ill. May the Holy One Praised Be He mercifully restore them to vigor and lift the burden of anxiety from their loved ones and friends.

On this (Sabbath, Festival, Judgment or Penitence) day we pray that they be spared further pain. May God grant them health of body and health of spirit and mind. May we speedily be privileged to greet their return to good health by welcoming them once again into our midst. Let us say: Amen.

Anyone wanting to add a name to the list should contact Diane Shalom (216-831-6555 ext. 104 or dianeshalom@bnaijeshurun.org) by Thursday afternoon at the latest for inclusion in that Shabbat's program. We will also pause during the prayer for people to recite additional names from their seats.

Men's Club Book Group: A Gentleman in Moscow by Amor Towles
Monday, July 9 • 7 pm

The story is centered around Count Alexander Ilyich Rostov, a Russian aristocrat sentenced to house arrest for writing a poem that encouraged revolt. Although he's sentenced to his home, the most luxurious hotel in Moscow, he will not be allowed to experience the luxury and privileges to which he's accustomed. Instead, he is to serve his sentence in a small attic room where he watches the world go by through its window. Over time, the Count forms friendships with the hotel staff and discovers more about himself and the world around him.

Free and open to all. Contact Harvey Wasserman with questions (hpwasserman@sbcglobal.net).
