D'var Torah: Sarah's Lives

Rabbi Suzanne Brody, Conservative Yeshiva Alum & Director of Education and Youth Programming at Temple Beth-El in Ithaca, NY

It's tough to sum up a person's entire life in just a few words. Often we start off by mentioning the number of years that someone lived, as if that could capture one's essence. This week, we read that "the life of Sarah was one hundred years and twenty years and seven years," (Genesis 23:1) as if this tells us everything that we need to know about who our matriarch Sarah was. Rashi, quoting the 4th century midrash Genesis Rabbah (58:1), explains that Sarah's age was recorded in this unusual format with "the word 'years' written after every digit ... to tell you that every digit is to be expounded upon individually." Given the many ways in which one changes throughout the course of life, there is a certain logic to this explanation.

However, I have difficulty with the rest of this midrash. Our Sages say that "when she was one hundred years old, she was like a twenty-year-old regarding sin. Just as a twenty-year-old has not sinned, because she is not liable to punishment, so too when she was one hundred years old, she was without sin." Given that liability for punishment comes with the onset of puberty, and we celebrate this milestone at 12 or 13, it's unclear why Sarah would have not been liable for punishment until she was 20.

However, since she was also somehow able to give birth at the age of 90, perhaps she just matured at a different rate than the vast majority of women today. Even so, it's human to make mistakes from time to time, and I find it hard to believe that Sarah could live so long without sinning even once. More problematic, to me, is the fact that the midrash concludes with the notion that "when she was twenty, she was like a seven-year-old as regards to beauty." Personally, I find this a rather disturbing notion.

When I think about these milestone years in Sarah's life, I find myself reflecting on the legacies that we leave behind for the people who knew us at different times in our lives. I am reminded how the childhoods of the friends we gain as adults remain somewhat of a mystery to us. Likewise, Sarah's childhood is not recorded in the Tanakh. We don't know who she was as a seven-year-old. We first meet Sarah as an adult, someone who is already married. We know that this phase of her life was one in which Sarah was a model of hospitality. She was able to awaken people's souls, bringing them closer to God through Judaism. By the age of one hundred, Sarah had become a mother and begins to reveal some of her emotions to us. She seems less perfect and therefore appears as fallibly human as the rest of us.

When we hear of someone's passing, our memories are of the person we knew, from whatever time our lives intersected. When Sarah died at the age of 127, to some, she was still the girl they knew at age seven. To others, she was the young woman of twenty. Yet others mourning Sarah knew her as the centenarian. We are always a combination of who we once were, of who we have become, and even a bit of who we will yet be. As Rashi says about the years of the life of Sarah, "all of them [were] equally good," and, I would add, all of them contain moments worth remembering.

Parashah Study: Chayei Sarah
Vered Hollander-Goldfarb, Conservative Yeshiva Faculty

The parashah opens with the death and burial of Sarah, continuing to Avraham's efforts to find a wife for his son Yitzhak.

TEXT - Bereshit 23:19-24:4

And then Avraham buried his wife Sarah... Avraham was now old, advanced in years, and the Lord had blessed Avraham in all things (Bakol). And Avraham said to his senior servant... go to the land of my birth and get a wife for my son Yitzhak.

- The position of "Avraham was now old... and the Lord had blessed Avraham in all things" raises some questions:
- Which story does it belong to?
- What light does the verse cast on each of these stories?
- The Torah states "The Lord blessed Avraham in all things". What would you consider being blessed in all things?

What would make that blessing tangible and lasting?

COMMENTARY - Ramban (Nachmanides) on Bereshit 24:1

Blessed Avraham in all things (Bakol): With a long life, and wealth, and sons, all that a human can desire (based on Ibn Ezra). The text mentions this to say that he was complete with all and didn't lack a thing except seeing children from his son that would inherit his position and honor. Our rabbis have a wonderful reading: ...he had a daughter and her name was Bakol (=in all)...

- What story does Ramban connect the verse to?
- In what areas of life does Ramban (who quotes Ibn Ezra) consider a "blessing in all things"?
- Out of the list that he brings at the beginning, what does Ramban focus on in the end?

What does he seem to add to the list? What do you think of his addition?

Kiddush or Oneg Sponsorships

Sponsorships are acknowledged in the Shabbat handout and in Tidings. The cost of a kiddush is $500 and an oneg is $250; partial sponsorships are available and they are tax deductible. May He who blessed our ancestors and is the source of all healing bless and heal those who are ill. May the Holy One Praised Be He mercifully restore them to vigor and lift the burden of anxiety from their loved ones and friends.

On this (Sabbath, Festival, Judgment or Penitence) day we pray that they be spared further pain. May God grant them health of body and health of spirit and mind. May we speedily be privileged to greet their return to good health by welcoming them once again into our midst. Let us say: Amen.

Enjoy music, games and entertainment with Emcee Mark Freiman, caricatures by Dan Singerman, the great dreidel spin-off and crafts for children. Dinner will include lasagna & latkes with a full salad bar and soup. Zamir, our children's choir, will join the congregation as we light the menorah.
