D'var Torah: On Aging

Rabbi Neil Janes, Conservative Yeshiva Alum ('03-'04) & Executive Director of the Lyons Learning Project and Rabbi of West London Synagogue

Yitzhak said to Yaakov, "Come closer, that I may feel you my son" (Bereshit 27:21) Some 18 months ago my 96 year old grandmother broke her hip and was admitted to hospital for surgery. A child refugee from Germany, who had only gone back to university in her later years, the little deafness and macular degeneration have not changed her mental acuity. I think that's what made the post-operative delirium so hard. She felt imprisoned and suspected everyone of nefarious intent, not even recognising her own children and grandchildren. In a semi-lucid moment she said to me, "Lean over Neil, let me feel your beard. I want to be sure it's you."

"I am old now and I do not know the day of my death" (Bereshit 27:2) I've spent so many years teaching these passages from Torah, perhaps I had become careless in my attention to Yitzhak. But recently I have become attuned once again to the nature of aging, of ill-health and responsibility. We spend many hours discussing whether Yitzhak was going along with the ruse hatched by Rivkah and Yaakov to steal the patriarchal blessing from Esav. Dressed up as Esav, Yaakov approaches his father and pretends to be the older son. Today I read the text differently and become heartbroken in thinking about Yitzhak's vulnerability.

"Then his father Yitzhak said to him [Yaakov]: Come close and kiss me, my son" (Bereshit 27:26) In the extended discussion of honor of one's parents in Babylonian Talmud Kiddushin 31b, Rabbi Abbahu recounts the example of Avimi his son. We're told in the gemara that not only would Avimi run to his father's call, even though he himself had five ordained sons (grandsons to R. Abbahu). On one occasion Avimi was called by R. Abbahu to bring water to drink.

"Before he brought it, Rabbi Abbahu dozed off. Avimi bent over him until he woke up." It's a touching moment that leads to the reward of Avimi being able to interpret an obscure aspect of Psalm 79. The language of the gemara to describe the dozing of Rabbi Abbahu is namnem from the verb נָוַם. The sense of the word is slumber, drowsy, even to be dying. Perhaps, the gemara hints, Rabbi Abbahu is edging towards the liminal world between life and death. And yet we know this verb well from Psalm 121 - הַגֹּאֲשׁוּתִי לֹא יִנָּוֵם the guardian of Israel does not slumber. Honoring parents is, after all, akin to honoring the Holy Blessed One.

"Yitzhak breathed his last and died, he was gathered to his kin, in ripe old age" (Bereshit 35:29) Yitzhak does not die immediately after the incident with his sons in Parashat Toledot. Much unfolds before his eventual death, though we hear really nothing about his life of old age. In my experience in Jewish communal life, these years - the hidden, often challenging, beautiful and uplifting, but as frequently full of diminishing health - have become more and more something for us to address as a people. Those who are aging and those who are caring - the direction of care now frequently extends up and down two or three generations. As I reflect on this and the honor and blessing of caring, I am drawn to the touching sentiment of the Bavli in exploring the notion of raising up in holiness. From this Rav Yosef derives the idea that the two tablets which Moses shattered are also placed in the Holy Ark and then:

"We learn from this that a sage who forgets his learning by his own misfortune, one should not treat him with disrespect" (Babylonian Talmud, Menachot 99a) We do not set aside people whose grandeur, on the surface, seems to have been diminished or whose vitality has dulled, who need to feel our presence to know who we are. Rather, we raise up in holiness - this is our vision.

Parashah Study: Toledot
Vered Hollander-Goldfarb, Conservative Yeshiva Faculty

In the last parashah Yitzhak married Rivkah.

TEXT - Bereshit 25:24-27 When her time to give birth was at hand, there were twins in her womb... When the boys grew up Esav became a man who knew the hunt, a man of the outdoors; while Yaakov was mild/plain man who stayed among the tents.

- What do you think is the significance of Esav and Yaakov being twins, born with no time nor physical distance between them? What might we expect from twins, and to what extent does it seem to be fulfilled here? We meet them again when they have grown up. What is the significance of the different directions that each of them took? What personality traits are developed in each profession? (Commentators mostly assume that 'staying among the tents' means that Yaakov was a shepherd.)

COMMENTARY - R. Samson Raphael Hirsch on Bereshit 25:27

"And [the lads] grew up..." ...While they were young they [Yitzhak and Rivkah] did not pay attention to their hidden inclinations. They gave the same Torah and the same education to both, forgetting a great rule of education "educate a child according to his ways". (Proverbs 22:6)...

- One who places Yaakov and Esav on one school bench, and ... educates them as one to a life of learning and thought - is guaranteed to be ruining one of them. Yaakov will draw from the well of wisdom with growing desire, while Esav will only wait for the day that he can throw away the old books and with them - a great life mission...
- Would Yitzhak and Rivkah have looked deeply into Esav's soul, if they would have asked themselves early on how the courage, strength and agility that are latent in Esav's soul - how can all this lend a shoulder to the worship of God; then the "hero" of the future would not become a hunting hero but 'a hero before the Lord'.
- Esav is frequently painted negatively in Jewish sources. What does Hirsch consider to be the cause of Esav's rejection, despite seemingly having all the opportunities that Yaakov was given?
- According to Hirsch, what is the cost of a failed Jewish education? How would you suggest educating today's "Esavs"?
