"This, too, shall pass." gam zeh ya'avov

During this season, we are commanded to dwell in a temporary dwelling, exposed to the elements. A sukkah, which is, by design, less than stable or sturdy than a typical house, is assembled and disassembled rapidly. With only three walls and a shoddy roof, so you can see the stars, the sukkah is adorned with produce.

A typical sukkah is contrary to everything that most Americans strive for. Rabbi David Schuck, a Conservative colleague of mine, sarcastically mocks, "Our notion of home is deeply rooted in the fantasy of home. We fetishize our houses, pouring money and time into them in the fantasy that if we can just find the perfect couch, we will achieve domestic bliss,

"We romanticize the notion of home so much so that it's as if home is a place in which relaxing yoga music plays while the sun shines into a room where an angelic child is peacefully sleeping."

Rabbi Stephanie

Over the past few months, we have been reminded on the television and social media of the realities of entire cities being devastated by raging fires, tidal waves, earthquakes and hurricanes.

perfection. We romanticize the notion of home so much so that it's as if home is a place in which relaxing yoga music plays while the sun shines into a room where an angelic child is peacefully sleeping." (Isn't that exactly what your home is like, all the time?)

And yet no matter how much we build up this fantasy of home, it is always temporary. Even if we spend years perfecting the intricate details around our house, things beyond our control can happen. Temporary might be a very long time, but complete permanence is never guaranteed.

We might move, and the furniture and trimmings don't fit aesthetically into the new environment or can't physically come with us. Over the past few months, we have been reminded on the television and social media of the realities of entire cities being devastated by raging fires, tidal waves, earthquakes and hurricanes.

Seeing the rubble and ash left behind by these catastrophic events, I am reminded of ancient buried cities. I remember walking through the streets of Pompeii, in awe of the magnitude of destruction. In an instant, countless hours of hard work and resources, along with all of your security, could vanish.

"In an instant, countless hours of hard work and resources, along with all of your security, could vanish."

Yet ringing through the streets, behind tears of loss and tears of gratitude, people

"We gather with those that matter most to us: our family, friends and guests that we invite in, offering shelter, food and rest to all who are nearby."

who have lost everything keep reminding themselves that "it's just stuff." This trope has been repeated by people in utter shock and devastation, clinging to what is most important—their lives.

That is what Sukkot is all about. We gather without the mask of granite countertops, hard wood floors or indoor plumbing. We gather with those that matter most to us: our family, friends and guests that we invite in, offering shelter, food and rest to all who are nearby.

We take a week out of every year to remember that we are beyond grateful for the shelter and security we have. Yet we are reminded that everything is temporary, and, therefore, we should be grateful and happy as we delight in the bounty of the season.

Rabbi Stephanie

BUY LOCAL. During Sukkot we are commanded to remember our dependency on the land and the environment to provide food for our families.

Buying locally produced foods from Farmer's Markets or stores reduces transportation-related fuel consumption, protects the land, strengthens community and delivers more nutritious sustainable food to your family. Board Member Message

Anne Matalon, Board Member

On July 1, 1992, my husband, Eran and I squeezed into our stuffed vehicles. We climbed the Southern California grapevine and fled north. We were young professionals in search of interesting work, more nature, seasons, fewer cars and Jewish community. Shortly after moving to Santa Rosa, we became regulars at CST. After a long workweek, the services were uplifting and meditative. We looked forward to the onegs just as much as the services.

Once our kids arrived, we traded leisurely onegs for religious school, the playground and child friendly services. We joined a fun, adventuresome Chavurah that will soon celebrate its 20th year. I finally learned Hebrew and in 2004, together with 11 other CST women, became an adult Bat Mitzvah. My sons became Bar Mitzvah; Fred in 2007 and Jake in 2011. Next spring, my daughter Lily will become a Bat Mitzvah.

Over the years, I have been part of the religious school committee, the art committee, the capital campaign, and the lifelong learning committee. With my family and others, I helped plan and build the gaga pit and provided parent logistical support for our teen youth groups (NFTY-Shorty and Chaverim). There have been rough patches; misunderstandings and communication breakdowns. Fortunately, we were able to keep the conversation going and move forward. For me, the best part of volunteering has been the relationships that have grown out of working and problem-solving together. I look forward to the next 25 years at CST.

L'hitraot (See you later),

The Bagel Boys (and Girls) Get Creamed

The Men's Bagel Club held its first meeting of the season at the Bohemian Creamery in Sebastopol. The owner, Lisa Gottreich, (and a member of B'nai Israel in Petaluma) gave all 15 of us a lesson on cheese making and tasting. We learned about the goats she milks and how that milk is processed into a variety of cheeses. She sells the cheese to restaurants and in her store.

Lisa provided samples of about a dozen different cheeses for those attending the tasting. Afterward, some of the group went to Willow Wood Market Cafe in Graton for brunch.

Landscaping Project: Ongoing and Underway

If anyone has noticed, the landscaping at our main entrance and around the front of our building (near the Kolbo and in front of the play structure), has been looking pretty good lately. This is the result of a very small committee of "crazy weed-whackers" who have been pulling weeds, applying mulch, trimming trees, cutting out shrubs, and cleaning up our landscaping.

It's a fun job, but a little overwhelming at times, so Ira Glasser has jumped in and helped out by getting the executive committee to approve the costs for landscape maintenance. This is part of our ongoing effort to service our 10-year old building and grounds.

A tree service company has completed the first phase of the project which is to "limb-up" and clean-up our trees. They have taken the tree trimmings and run them through a grinder, resulting in piles "arbor mulch" which will be spread out across various targeted sections of the property to help keep the weeds in check.

In his appeal, Ira said, "... for those of you reading this article who like to spread mulch, we are going to be making a big collection of it, and the more we can spread now, the less weeds we will be asking you to pull later. L'Shanah Tovah."

Are You Ready to Change the World? L'Taken Social Justice Seminar

February 9–12, 2018

Last year, over 20 high school students from CST participated in the Religious Action Center's L'Taken Seminar in Washington, D.C.

Lobbying a member of congress is a unique experience that very few Americans take advantage of and one that can have a significant impact on the course of legislation. Throughout the weekend, students were given the knowledge and tools to write an effective, persuasive and passionate speech on a topic of their choice.

All the while, students had the chance to meet and mingle with hundreds of Reform Jews from across the United States, all of whom are in D.C. for the same reason — to pursue tikkun olam. If your high school student is interested in participating in this once-in-a-lifetime event, contact Rabbi Kramer rabbikramer@cstsr.org. Hurry, as space is limited.
