PARSHA MATTERS - by Rabbi Sam Taylor

The Torah presents the prohibition of Shatnez, forbidding wearing an item of clothing made from both wool and linen. Chizkuni, based on the Midrash Tanchuma, comments that this prohibition hearkens back to the story of Cain and Abel, and the calamity which resulted from the two of them together. As the Torah writes, Abel was a shepherd who tended to sheep, while Cain worked as a farmer, and according to tradition, Cain grew flax. In order to commemorate the tragedy, Chizkuni explains, the Torah forbade wearing a combination of the two materials associated with these two men, wool and linen.

This law, as understood by Chizkuni, perhaps relates to the fundamental mistake underlying the tragic episode of Abel's murder. In the Torah's brief account of this tragedy, it emphasizes that Abel brought his offering purely for the sake of competition, to mimic his brother's offering. Indeed, the Sheim Mishmuel suggests that Abel deserved his tragic fate specifically because he mimicked his brother, rather than charting his own path in the service of the Almighty. This same competitive mindset is what drove Cain to his violent response to his rejection. He simply could not tolerate the experience of being rejected while his brother earned acceptance.

In commemoration of this tragic mistake, we forever keep wool and linen apart, keeping Cain separate from Abel, because Shatnez teaches us that the solution to the Cain/Abel situation, to strife and envy, is to respect the different roles, and different lifestyles of different people. Cain and Abel were two distinct human beings, one producing wool and one producing linen, who should have each felt perfectly content and found contentment by fulfilling his role and following his individual course.

We need to instead focus on living the lives we are best suited to live, on working to achieve the most we can, whether it is with wool or linen, without feeling pressured or threatened by the success of others. If we live with this mindset of separating Cain and Abel, recognising that each person is given his or her unique talents to nurture, we will be able to experience joy, contentment and fulfillment.
