PARSHA MATTERS - by Rabbi Sam Taylor

Moshe Rabbeinu assures the Israelites that 'this command which I issue to you today... is not in the heavens... and it is not across the sea... for the matter is very close to you...' The common interpretation of these verses is that Moshe speaks of the accessibility of a Torah lifestyle. It is something that is readily accessible and while it entails considerable effort and sacrifice, we should not perceive it as something beyond our reach. The Ramban, however, explains these verses as speaking of the particular command of teshuva, which Moshe discusses in the previous section. As difficult as it may seem to change, Moshe assures the Nation that it is possible and well within their reach.

The Lubavitcher Rebbe noted the point of connection between these two interpretations. In the previous section, Moshe foresees the time when G-d would banish the Jewish People from their land on account of their wrongdoing, and the time when they would repent and return to the service of G-d, whereupon G-d would bring them back to their land. According to the standard interpretation of our verses, the Rebbe noted, Moshe here impresses upon the people that even in exile, while enduring hardship and instability, the Torah is 'not in the heavens.' Moshe reassures the Nation that they are capable of remaining loyal to G-d and to Torah even under the harsh conditions of exile, and so they should not despair or try excusing themselves from their Torah obligations after being driven from their land and subject to hostile foreign rule.

Herein, the Rebbe suggested, lies the connection to teshuva. Just as we are reassured of our ability to observe the Torah under the difficult practical conditions of exile, we are likewise reassured of our ability to observe the Torah under difficult spiritual conditions. Even if we have failed and strayed far from the path we are expected to follow, 'it is not in the heavens.' The Torah is relevant, binding and accessible under all circumstances, including under conditions of exile, both geographic exile as well as spiritual exile. We are guaranteed of our ability to live a Torah life regardless of our past, and no matter what kind of adverse conditions we currently face, even if we are responsible for creating those adverse conditions through our sinful conduct. Under all circumstances, 'the matter is very close to you,' and spiritual excellence is well within our reach.

Project Kol David (The Sound of David) honours the memory of David Wm. Brown ^{ztl} who for so many years dedicated himself to ensuring we fulfilled the Mitzvah of Shofar on Rosh Hashana. David made special efforts to blow shofar for those who were unable to come to shul by bringing the sound of the shofar to them. Project Kol David continues David's legacy by matching those who need to fulfill the Mitzvah with volunteers who are available to blow shofar for them. Please notify the office at lifecycle@shomayim.org or 416-789-3213 if you need a volunteer to blow shofar for you, or whether you are able to help by blowing shofar.
