HALAKHIC CORNER
Making A Bracha for Someone Else

Q: What type of blessings may a person recite for someone else?

A: The laws which dictate when one is allowed to recite a blessing on behalf of another are complex. There is a major difference between a Birchat HaMitzvah, the blessing recited when performing a Mitzvah, and Birchat HaNehenin, the blessing recited before eating food. The Gemara (Rosh HaShana 29a) teaches that even if one has already said a Bracha and fulfilled their Mitzvah obligation, that person may still make the blessing for someone else who has yet to fulfill the Mitzvah (Yatzah – Motzei). For example, on Rosh Ha'Shana a Ba'al Tokeah may blow the Shofar and recite the Bracha for someone else even if the Ba'al Tokeah has previously fulfilled his Mitzvah of Shofar. The Mishnah Berurah (O"C 167/19) among many others, explains that part of a Jew's obligation to do a Mitzvah is to help other Jews perform the same Mitzvah, and as such, one may always make a Birchat HaMitzvah for others. In contrast, there is no such obligation when it comes to eating food. Therefore, Rabbi Yosef Karo (O"C 167/19) rules that unless someone is eating the food, one may not make a blessing on behalf of someone else who would like to eat food. Rabbi Karo mentions one notable exception. Namely, an adult may make a Bracha for a child even though the adult is not eating the food. This is allowed in order to ensure that the child learns how to properly recite the Brachot.

Question For the Week
By
Adam Lewis

Q: How many Brachot (blessings) should an individual say each day?

A: The Shulchan Aruch writes that each person needs to say 100 Brachot every day. On weekdays, this is easily accomplished through regular davening (three times each day) and making Brachot over food and other daily occurrences. On Shabbat and Yom Tov, the Amidah is quite a bit shorter, so an individual would need to make additional Brachot on snacks. If that's still not enough, an individual can reach 100 by saying Amen to someone else's Bracha. The Sefer Nutrei Bracha, commenting on the Mishneh Berurah, goes one step further: Any words of praise to Hashem can be considered a Bracha.

100 daily Brachot may seem like a lot, but the implication is that there is no limit to how much we can praise Hashem. And by extension, there is tremendous value in giving sincere, thoughtful praise to others. Just as it's important to be grateful and say "thank you" to others (and Hashem), it is critically important for us to acknowledge the good work and efforts of our friends, family, and co-workers. We all do dozens of meritorious things each day, yet many of us aren't aware that we're having a positive impact on the lives of others. Praise, given authentically, can completely turn around someone's day. We're already in the habit of praising Hashem 100 times daily; it's a simple next step to expand that habit to each other.
