How Much is Enough??

In this week's Torah Portion, we learn a great deal about blessings. Among these blessings is one of the most famous within Jewish circles, known as the Priestly Benediction. This is the blessing that is traditionally recited by the Kohanim over the congregation. The blessing has also transferred to be recited at life cycle ceremonies as well as during special occasions within a person's life.

Our sages had much debate as to what the blessing actually meant and for who it was actually intended. Some say the blessing's intention was to influence the material wealth of an individual or a couple. The first part of the threefold benediction states:

"The Eternal bless you and protect you!" (Numbers 6:24).

Commentators, including Rashi, interpret this as "May God bless you with material wealth and guard you from robbers." In fact there is a specific midrash that devotes itself to the description of a list of additional items that one with material wealth should be conscious of:

One with wealth should guard that wealth in order to do good deeds with it.
One should treat his money as he would a person and be sure to keep it from being influenced by the Yetzer HaRah, the Evil Inclination.

One ought to guard herself from the influence and power money could produce.

One ought to protect himself from the demons that surround him (in other words, others who would manipulate or take advantage of the rich person). (see Midrash B'midbar Rabbah 11:5)

As we know, Judaism consistently reminds us that giving tzedakah and helping those less fortunate is a tremendous act of faith and a mitzvah. What Judaism doesn't talk about often is how people with material wealth should handle their possessions. As the midrash teaches us, it is not so important how much a person has, but how that person uses it to make the world a better place.

We are all aware of the power that money and material wealth can yield within our society. And while on a personal level not all of us have great material wealth, many of us know people that do. We have all wondered what would happen if we won the lottery tomorrow...would your life change for the better? What would you use the money for? Who would you help?

Regardless of your financial status, Judaism teaches us that the more we give, the more we receive in return. Being free from one's financial obligations can be liberating, but freedom ultimately comes when we can use our own possessions to help those around us in our community and to make the world a better place for present and future generations.

Shabbat Shalom, Cantor David Rosen
