Rabbi Weinstock's Message

Tu B'Shevat 5784 Musings

Every year on the spring holiday of Tu B'shevat, the Knesset traditionally holds a festive event, open to the public, to celebrate both the holiday and the Knesset's founding in 1949. This time, however, the ceremony began with a moment of silence in memory of the 24 soldiers who were killed in two incidents in the Gaza Strip on Monday.

Knesset Speaker MK Amir Ohana stressed the diverse backgrounds of the soldiers who were killed, including Elkana Vizel, who was evacuated from Gush Katif in the Gaza Strip in 2005; Nir Bin-yamin, from Givatayim; and Ahmad Abu-Latif, from the Bedouin city of Rahat.

The modern celebration of Tu B'Shevat is tied to the modern state of Israel. This year, Tu B'Shevat is overshadowed by the war in Gaza. In honor of our recent celebration of Tu B'Shevat, I want to share three stories of hope and resilience that relate to Israel, agriculture, and October 7:

From Reuters January 21: Some of the bereaved families whose loved ones were killed in a Hamas rampage at the Nova music festival joined an Israeli Jewish nature project group on Sunday for a special tree-planting event at the site. Around 1,000 people planted about 200 seedlings in the scorched earth of the Re'im parking lot where thousands of young people were partying in the dawn hours of Oct. 7 when armed Palestinian infiltrators swept in.

"I still can't believe that we are planting a tree instead of hugging our child," Ela Bahat, whose son Dror was killed at the festival, told Reuters. Family members wept while planting trees with the Israeli Jewish National Fund, hoping to bring new life to the scene of death and desecration.

From the Times of Israel, November 5, 2023

The owners of a small plant nursery in Kibbutz Be'eri, one of the worst devastated communities in the October 7 Hamas onslaught, thought they had lost their business when they were forced to evacuate. But then they returned, only to discover soldiers had broken in to water the plants. "Be'eri had a thriving nursery for household plants, a little blossoming paradise that made everyone happy," owner Avivit John wrote on social media Saturday. "When we were forced to evacuate, it was clear that all the plants would dry up. Rain does not get inside and the watering was done by hand. After two days without water, the plants start to wither," she said.

"Now we found a small miracle in Be'eri," she wrote, posting a video of the thriving nursery they found when they returned several weeks later and a sign explaining it. "Sorry we broke into the nursery, we had to water the plants. With love, the soldiers," the sign said.

On October 7th a tank entering Kfar Azza ran over an orange tree as it was responding to the terrorist attack. The tank was part of the Israeli response that was ultimately able to kill 100 terrorists in the kibbutz. Three weeks later, those who were in the tank came back to Kfar Azza to plant a new orange tree to replace the one that they had destroyed. See picture on my blog (ravayosef.blogspot.com) of the planting, with the old tree in the background.

When I was a high school senior I applied to Yeshivat Har Etzion and was interviewed by the great Rav Aharon Lichtenstein zt'l. In the second part of the interview Rav Lichtenstein asked me why I thought the founding fathers of the United States idealized the agrarian lifestyle. The Torah also idealizes an agrarian lifestyle and a connection to the Land. Perhaps that is because Jews, like farmers, value hard work, patience, resilience, and prayer.

LET'S TURN THE DAY THAT CHANGED EVERYTHING... INTO A NIGHT TO REMEMBER FOREVER
