D’var Torah: Rabbi Yosef Weinstock

The nation continues to express shock and grief over last Wednesday’s shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland. On Monday I visited three of the shiva homes, where I offered my condolences on behalf of myself and the Young Israel of Hollywood community. I was glad to see and hear that other shul members similarly made shiva visits.

In Israel, when a family loses a loved one to terror it is common for the shiva house to be visited by strangers who may not have known the victim, nor even the family. They come because they want to show that the Jewish People are one big family. A loss experienced by one is felt by all. This is especially true when the death occurred due to a terrorist act. Those not personally impacted by the tragedy know that “it could have just as easily been me”. It reminds them of the frailty of the human condition. Though they can’t feel that pain nor take it away from the grieving family, they want to visit the shiva house to at least envelop the family with love and to show solidarity. I think that strangers in Israel also show up at these shivas as an act of defiance. Terrorist acts in Israel are meant to scare Jews out of living our lives, and dissuade Jews from living in Israel. By visiting the shiva house, Israelis are showing their defiance in the face of terror and their will to continue living and developing the Land of Israel in the face of challenges and heartbreak.

Visiting the shiva of a stranger is less common in the United States. But I am glad that these families were willing to open their homes (at least for a day or two) to us strangers, who wanted to offer condolences, show our solidarity, appreciate how precious life is, and demonstrate our resolve to live meaningful lives in memory of those whose lives were cut short.

When we went to the shiva for teacher Scott Beigel, I had the opportunity to speak with Scott’s mother, father and sister. Scott, aged 35, was shot and killed while shutting a classroom door, which he opened to let more students take shelter. Scott was a geography teacher as well as a cross country coach.

At the shiva, Scott’s father told me that this was his first year teaching at MSD. Scott would complain to his father that he didn’t think the students liked him, he wasn’t sure that he was making an impact. After his death many students shared how much Scott meant to them; and not just on the day of the shooting. Upon hearing this from Scott’s dad (this sentiment was also reported in the media) I couldn’t help feel that the enormous tragedy was somehow exacerbated by the fact that Scott didn’t know the positive impact he had made while he was alive. Too often we wait until someone is gone before process the impact someone has had on us, or express the appreciation that is really due.

This week we read Parshat Tetzaveh. Once Moshe is born in Shemot, this Parsha is the only one that does not mention Moshe Rabbeinu’s name. Many note that this Parsha usually falls out around Moshe’s yahrzeit - 7th of Adar. Wherever we find Moshe’s name we often find complaining and grievances by the Jewish People directed at him. Only when Moshe is absent do we ask about him. In his absence we are meant to appreciate all that he does and means to us.

Let us not wait for Tetzaveh to appreciate Moshe. And let us not wait for a tragedy, a eulogy or an obituary to tell people how much they mean to us and how much we appreciate them.

Tillerson comments on threats from Hezbollah and Syria

The United States is concerned about Syria creating further opportunities for threats to Israel, Jordan and Turkey, and instability in the region, U.S. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson said on Tuesday. The Jerusalem Post reported that Tillerson, speaking in an interview with Michel Ghandour of Al Hurra TV, commented that the threats Israel is confronted which emanate both from Hezbollah in Lebanon and from Syria. “We take the threats to Israel seriously and we take a view that Israel has every right to defend itself from those threats.” Asked about the issue of Iran’s influence in the region, Tillerson asserted that the U.S. believes the future of responding to the Islamic Republic’s influence in Syria is through the political process. “We want to use our presence to also be a stabilizing force to support talks in Geneva under the U.N. Security Council resolution process, allow the Syrian people to write a new constitution, allow them to hold free and fair elections. And through that process, we believe Syria will strengthen its independence and will take its own actions to reduce and ultimately reject the influence of Iran inside of Syria.”

Tillerson continued, ”It is our view – I think it’s the view by and large of the international community – that Iran’s presence in these countries is not helpful. We ask Iran to withdraw and send their forces home, and that’s what we believe is the right pathway for the future.”

As we prepare for Purim, plans are in the works for our annual Mesibat Meir Purim Celebration. As in years past, the celebration is dedicated in loving memory of Michael Zablotsky, son of Charles and Lily Zablotsky, who was tragically taken from us at age 20, just days before Purim 5755/1995. As in previous year, we are once seeking sponsors for this event; I hope we can count on you to help make Purim a wonderful experience for the children of our community.

This week’s parsha is Tetzaveh, the only parsha in the Torah where Moshe’s name is omitted since the point from which we are introduced to him. The Vilna Gaon notices further that this parsha always falls on the first week of Adar, when we mark the passing of Moshe, on the seventh of Adar. Consequently, a reason could be suggested that his name is absent in this parsha to express the loss of such a great leader.

There is not a rule that Moshe’s name should be mentioned in every parsha, however, the Torah repeats, “and you” throughout Tetzaveh referring to Moshe. This begs the question of why didn’t Hashem mention Moshe by name? This whole portion refers to Aharon and his sons; their Priestly jobs, their inauguration and their clothes. It could be that Moshe didn’t want to interfere with his brother’s portion, which introduces his role and announces that Aharon and his descendants will become the Kohanim for all future generations. In recognition of the fact that this is his brother’s “moment”, Moshe takes a step back out of the limelight, but is nonetheless present in the proceedings. This teaches us that even Moshe, the greatest leader of our nation, knows at times to step back and let others have their chance to shine.

It is Moshe’s name that is absent from the parsha, not him. There is a difference. One might be tempted to think that when a name is unmentioned the person also ceases to exist. But for those who can see what is there and what is not there, to read between the lines, names are not necessary to be put up in lights and said too often or too loudly. For those who can appreciate humility, we can see that Moshe’s influence is constant but he does not need his name to be forefront and center. To shout your name for the world to hear shows a lack of confidence for the worry that people may forget you. It is then the only supremely confident and content individual that can decline the fame and embrace the humility.

We can learn from Moshe that we do not have to promote our deeds for everyone to hear if we do good, help others and lead a life of Torah. Are our actions not valuable when they are not well known to all? Moshe teaches us throughout the Torah that one can be there, and not be there at the same time. One’s actions can have a ripple effect and impact many however their name does not need to be mentioned at all in the process. Moshe has left some space for others to fill, whether it is for his brother Aharon or another Jew, he is showing humility and modesty through everything he does.
