SHAVUOT IN ISRAEL IS DIFFERENT

Gabrielle Donati

Shavuot in Israel is different than Shavuot anywhere else. In the US, Shavuot is a relatively unknown holiday outside of the Traditional Jewish community. Many secular Jews have never heard of Shavuot, and those who have, likely don't know what it's about or what we're celebrating. In Israel - everyone knows Shavuot.

One of the perks of living in Israel is that Shabbat and the chagim

(religious holidays) are legal holidays. Even in more secular cities like Tel Aviv, outside of some restaurants and small markets, everything is closed. No one is shopping, offices and schools are closed; public transport stops. There is a quietness and holiness to these days that is palpable no matter your level of observance. As one of the three "pilgrim festivals" detailed in the Torah, where Jews from all over the country traveled to Jerusalem to celebrate at the Temple, Shavuot is an official holiday, and everyone is observing on some level.

Shabbat and chagim are synonymous with family in Jewish tradition, and this is certainly the same in Israel. Orthodox to secular, these are days that focus on family and spending time together. The Orthodox structure of Shavuot is the same as outside of Israel, the restrictions of chagim are in place, synagogue services are attended, the table is laden with dairy delights, and the tradition is all-night study at the synagogue or at other Jewish organizations. In Anglo communities, there are plenty of study sessions in Israel to attend. Secular Israelis don't have the tradition of all-night study but Shavuot dinner with the family is a given and the day is spent in a family activity - often taking a road trip to a national park, the sea, or a quaint Israeli town. Whereas in the diaspora, secular Jews likely don't even know that a Jewish holiday is taking place, it's a festive and happy event in Israel that everyone is aware of and with few exceptions, everyone celebrates with family and friends.

My best friend's Hebrew birthday is on Shavuot and I have enjoyed many Shabbat and holiday meals at his family table. There is an extra layer of joy on Shavuot as we celebrate his birthday, and I personally celebrate the gift of his friendship and the gift of being so warmly welcomed by his family throughout the years.

His family epitomizes the blending of various observance levels and Jewish traditions. His father was Yemenite, and his mother is Polish, so I've been exposed to both Ashkenazi and Sephardi customs. In the 1950s, his grandfather founded a Yemenite shul in Tel Aviv that still holds Shabbat and chagim services. All the milestones of his family are celebrated there. His older sister, a mother of seven children, has become more involved in Judaism since their father passed and is on her own journey of more traditional observance. It's been beautiful to witness the deep joy that she experiences in becoming more observant while at the same time, being completely accepting and non-judgmental toward family members who still lean toward the secular.

Everyone in this family respects everyone else's religious observance and does not judge, separate, or exclude. As a Jewby-Choice myself, this acceptance resonates deeply with me as I have had to find a balance between my religious beliefs and those of my Christian family. It's all about Shalom Bayit—domestic tranquility!

For me personally, Shavuot is not only about what we receive from Hashem (G-d): the gifts of the harvest and the gift of the Torah - it's about giving thanks in return for these gifts, as well as the innumerable blessings that we receive moment-to-moment from Hashem.

The Torah was given to the Jewish people, but I see it as a gift to all humankind. Three major world religions embrace the Torah as their ethical foundation and even much of secular society respect the variety of moral and ethical laws that are based on Torah commandments. This world would be a very different place had Hashem not provided us with this guidebook to living ethically. No matter your religion, tradition, or lack thereof, every soul is blessed by this gift.

It's a particular comfort to spend Shabbat and the chagim in Israel. After so many years living here, I take it for granted that these holy days of ours are embedded in the energy of this place and I profoundly feel the difference when I travel outside the country.

As we celebrate the first fruits and the giving of the Torah on Shavuot, I wish that all of us are able to feel the joy and gratitude that comes from being on the receiving end of such priceless treasures --and that we acknowledge and give thanks for the abundance in our lives on so many levels.

Hashem is surely the Giver Who keeps on giving. Shavuot Sameach.
