Dvar Torah:

Yitro heard how Moshe and Bnei Yisrael safely left from Mitzrayim and he goes out to meet them in the desert. Moshe tells Yitro firsthand how Hashem delivered Bnei Yisrael safely out of Egypt. Yitro notices the constant and ongoing line of people waiting to see and speak to Moshe, and consult with him about their different questions. Yitro does not think this is an effective way of managing Bnei Yisrael and recommends delegating some responsibilities to other trustworthy leaders.

Moshe picks judges to help filter down and resolve the issues within Bnei Yisrael. Finally, Bnei Yisrael arrives at Har Sinai where Hashem tells Moshe that if they follow in his ways, they will be a treasured nation, filled with priests. The people of Israel are instructed to prepare to receive the Torah. When the moment comes, the mountain fills with smoke, thunder and lightning are bellowing, and the people are too frightened. They ask Moshe to be the liaison between them and G-d, and for him to tell them the 10 Commandments from Hashem.

After Shul Ask Your Children:

1. Who is Yitro?
2. What advice does Yitro offer Moshe?
3. Which mountain was the Torah given on?
4. What are the Ten Commandments?

2. That he appoints judges to delegate issue resolution within Bnei Yisrael
3. Har Sinai
4. The Ten Commandments: I am the Lord your G-d, You shall have no other G-ds except me, You shall not take G-d's name in vain, Remember Shabbat and keep it holy, Honor your father and mother, Do not murder, Do not commit adultery, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Do not covet your neighbor's things

DVAR TORAH

Parshat Yitro
February 14-15
By: Alan Axelrod

Love and Fear of Hashem

The Torah sets forth two major motivations to impel us to serve Hashem and perform His commandments. Those are ahava, love of G-d, and yira, fear or awe of G-d: – acknowledgment of both His authority over us and that reward and punishment respectively can follow from our acting in accordance with or opposition to His will. Those motivations are set forth in Kriat Sh'ma that we read twice daily in davening. The first paragraph of Sh'ma contains the command to love G-d with all our heart, our soul, our might. The second paragraph tells us that if we obey the commandments, things will go well, but if we turn away from them, Hashem will punish us by banishing us from Eretz Yisrael. The importance of these concepts is demonstrated by their centrality in Moshe's valedictory speech in Sefer Devarim, a charge to Am Yisrael to remember as they are about to enter the land. So what do these concepts of ahavat and yirat Hashem have to do with Parashat Yitro?

Yitro recounts the seminal event in our history – G-d's revelation on Har Sinai and the giving of the Torah, beginning with the Aseret Ha'Dibrot. A close look at the parasha will provide some insight into the tension between ahava and yira as the major motivations for serving Hashem by following His commandments. It will also provide some thought regarding the questions posed in the title of Rabbi Robinson's previous class on G-d and Faith – did G-d really speak, and does He ever change His mind?

Shmot 19:9 recounts that G-d told Moshe, "I will come to you in the thickness of a cloud, so that the people hear when I speak with you..." This seems to say that Hashem was planning to tell Moshe the Dibrot, and the people would either listen in so they would believe what Moshe said came from G-d, or that Moshe would interpret the otherwise unintelligible revelatory sounds they were hearing, but not that G-d would speak directly to the people. However, the Torah goes on to say: "Then Moshe reported the people's words to G-d." (19:9).

Rashi explains that "the words of the people" means Bnai Yisrael responded that they wanted to hear from G-d directly, not from Moshe. Rashi, as explained by Rav Menachem Leibtag, bases this, and the idea that Hashem acceded to the people's request, on Shmot 19:10-11, where it says that G-d instructed Moshe to tell the people to get ready, for on the third day G-d would reveal Himself "in view of all the people on Har Sinai." This suggests that G-d changed His mind, as it were, and now planned to convey His mitzvot directly to the people instead of through Moshe as His intermediary.

On the third day, Hashem did reveal Himself, as Har Sinai was full of smoke, fire, shofar blasts, and the mountain shaking violently. Sh. 19:18. The Torah then recounts the Dibrot that Hashem spoke.

Right after this, the Torah tells us that upon experiencing the grandeur and awe of the revelation, the people moved back, away from Har Sinai, and told Moshe that he should hear the Torah from Hashem and tell it to them, because they were afraid that if they experienced any more of G-d's awesomeness, they would die. Moshe told them not to be afraid, that G-d was testing them to instill yira within them so they wouldn't sin. Then Moshe entered the cloud on Har Sinai alone and received the rest of the Torah, which he later related to the people. So, it appears that G-d reverted to His original plan to give the Torah through Moshe, because, overwhelmed by this intense experience of Hashem's awesome presence and revelation, the frightened people changed their minds and asked for an intermediary, as Hashem originally had planned. Nonetheless, G-d allowed the people to try to be as close to Him, to show their love for Him, as they requested.

The major commentators agree that G-d changed the plan for delivering the Dibrot, but disagree about when the request occurred that led to G-d's reverting to giving the mitzvot through Moshe. Ramban places it right before Matan Torah took place, as the revelation was just beginning. Rashi and Chizkuni place it during Matan Torah, between the first two and last eight commandments. That is supported by the fact that the first two Dibrot are in the first person: "I am your G-d," and "You shall have no other gods besides Me," which suggests Hashem spoke the first two directly to the people. The other eight Dibrot are told in the third person, e.g., "Do not take the name of the Lord your G-d in vain," which suggests that these were told over by Moshe after he heard them from G-d. Ibn Ezra places the change in plan after all ten Dibrot were given, because that's when the Torah mentions it, and that all of the other mitzvot were told only to Moshe.

This review of Matan Torah shows that from the start, there's been a tension in our search for the proper relationship with G-d. We must strive to show our love of G-d, by coming as close to Him as possible, and that He is ready and willing to let us try to be close to Him. In contrast, we must also constantly be aware of G-d's awesomeness and our own humble status, and always remember to have the proper distance and awe which will lead us to be as respectful as possible of Hashem, His mitzvot, His creations, particularly our fellow human beings, and the places where we worship G-d. The importance of trying to reach the proper balance between ahavat and yirat Hashem is something we should always be mindful of, and that, I believe, is the reason why Hashem commanded us to perform the mitzvah of Kriat Sh'ma, which mentions both ahavat Hashem and yirat Hashem, every day, both morning and night. Shabbat Shalom!
