A MESSAGE FROM RABBI STRAUCHLER*REMEMBERING AND NOT REMEMBERING YOSEF

Parshat Shemot describes the dramatic collapse of the Jewish people's political standing in Egypt in a simple sentence.

יָקָם מֶלֶךְ-חָדָשׁ עַל-מִצְרַיִם אֲשֶׁר לֹא יָדָע אֶת-יוֹסֵף:

A new king arose over Egypt, who did not know Yosef.

As Jews who have sadly seen such reversals recur throughout our history, we ask "How could this happen?" How can it be that Joseph's economic administration of Egyptian society, the saving of thousands of lives during a horrible famine, and his consolidation of power in the hands of Pharaoh would simply be forgotten?

The classic commentaries respond to this problem. Rashi is so bothered that he reads the verse in a non-literal way. Rashi interprets that Pharaoh remembered Joseph, but he pretended not to.

עָשָׂה עֲצָמוֹ כְּאִלוּ לֹא יָדָעוּ

The cause of our persecution is a conscious desire by those who hate us to ignore our contributions to society. R. Ovadya Sforno retains the literal meaning. Joseph's contributions were recorded in the annals of the kingdom, but they were no longer of relevance to the new king and his Egypt.

אף על פי שהיה זכרון ממנו בדברי הימים למלכים בלי ספק, בפרט בענין החומש אשר שם לחק (בראשית מ"ז:כ"ו), לא עלתה על לב המלך החדש אפשרות היותו מזה העם, ושהיה עם זה ראוי לשאת פנים לעמו בעבורו.

Even if he was intellectually aware of the history, the new Pharaoh felt that such a history did not create any Egyptian debt to Yosef's people. For Sforno, there is a natural gap between past and present – between the historical and the relevant. In confronting antisemitism today, we must remember these two explanations. Some Holocaust denial is driven by a conscious hate of the Jewish people. Yet, far more dangerous is the Holocaust remembrance that says that its lessons are no longer relevant to the Jewish people, because things are somehow different.

Yet, there is a third explanation. Ibn Ezra rejects the assumption of our question. Ibn Ezra asks us to read the verse precisely, "A new king arose." Ibn Ezra explains that a new Egyptian dynasty, which was unrelated to the earlier Pharaoh, rose to power.

שלא היה מזרע המלוכה, כמו: כי הקים בני את עבדי

Past royal debts were erased by the transition, and the history books were wiped clean. Our belief as Jews in the debts that Egyptian society held toward us were of no greater value than Yosef's belief in the sar hamashkim who forgot Yosef's assistance in interpreting his dream. The implications of the Ibn Ezra are disturbing, but must be confronted honestly. Despite our energetic attempts to keep Holocaust education in the forefront of society, in the end, we cannot rely on others to remember the Holocaust and prevent it from happening again. Moral debts are ephemeral. They disappear very quickly. With trust in Hashem's help, we alone must insure the safety of our people.
