Torah on Tour

Having a Mitzvah Mindset

According to a simple understanding of our parsha, one who does not perform the mitzvot in the Torah is cursed. How can we take this at face value when there are so many mitzvot - some that only certain people are able to perform! The Torah sets up a seemingly impossible standard.

Rabbi Chaim ibn Attar (Morocco, 18th c.) explains that the Torah is not telling us that we are cursed for not performing every mitzvah; rather, the curse is referring to one who is not willing to perform a mitzvah that may "come his way." If a Jew encounters the opportunity to fulfill a mitzvah, she must be unhesitant in fulfilling it.

Once, the great Rav Eliyashiv (Israel, 20th c.) hired an electrician to do some work in his home. While he was working, Rav Elyashiv was informed that his daughter had passed away. Overhearing the commotion, the electrician quickly finished his work, and returned home without giving a bill to the rabbi. While preparing for the funeral, Rav Eliyashiv asked his grandson to request the electrician return. He wanted to pay the electrician for his work in order to fulfil the mitzvah of paying one's worker on the day he completes his job. Only once he had done that, he agreed to leave for his daughter's funeral.

Support Amy's Mitzvah Project

My name is Amy Weissberger. I have been a member of Beth Tikvah since I was born, and my grandparents, Milton and Gilda Rusonik, were founding members of the shul. As some of you might know, I really love baking. It just so happens that my Torah portion for my upcoming Bat Mitzvah has to do with food. In my Parshah, Joseph interprets Pharaoh's dreams as seven years of feast followed by seven years of famine in Egypt. I decided to connect the idea of food insecurity and my love of baking for my Bat Mitzvah project.

I decided to make a cookbook featuring some of my favourite recipes. I was inspired by the amazing desserts made by my various family members, including my mom, great aunt, and my late Bubbie Gilda. I will be selling copies of my cookbook for $18 - I can email you a digital copy or print a copy for you (printed copies will be $20). The famine in my Parshah made me think about those who are hungry across Canada and Israel. So 100% of the money raised from the sales of the cookbook will be donated to Food Banks Canada and Leket Israel.

Thanks for your support! I can't wait to share my special book with you.
