Scholar-in-Residence Sivan Rahav Meir
Shabbat Parshat Breisheet - October 26

From the Jerusalem Post, September 9, 2018

Journalist Sivan Rahav-Meir, is one of the most influential and easily identifiable people in the Israeli media and on social media. A popular TV and radio presenter as well as a columnist for Yediot Aharonot, her image stands out as one of the few Orthodox Jewish women in the mainstream media. In a divided society, her wisdom and style have enabled her to gain a huge following among both religious and secular in Israel and a growing base of fans in the Diaspora.

Rahav-Meir's best-selling book Hashtatus Hayehudi was recently translated into English as #Parasha: Weekly Insights From a Leading Israeli Journalist. It grew from her popular free weekly Torah study sessions in Jerusalem (and previously in Tel Aviv), which are followed live via Facebook by tens of thousands of people worldwide.

Rahav-Meir was born and brought up in a secular home and started her career in journalism at a young age, writing for youth newspapers and magazines and hosting youth programs on Educational Television. She became religious as a teenager and did her military service at Army Radio. After her army service, as a reporter on Channel 2 News, Rahav-Meir covered the Supreme Court, the Knesset and religious affairs, among other fields. Although she has not given up her interest in politics and current affairs, much of her time is devoted to connecting it to the weekly Torah portion, reinforcing the relevance of Torah in today's world and bringing it to an audience that might otherwise not be exposed to this sort of Jewish learning.

Rahav-Meir is a popular speaker who has addressed communities in North America and Europe. "I think we have a lot to learn from the communities abroad," she told Harkov. "As Israelis, we think we know everything, but I saw great things. I think we can learn how to build a community and have a shul not just be a place to pray, but so many other things, an empire of activities."
