“that just as a father will chastise his son” Bamidbar 8:5

As a continuation of what we spoke about last week in the Shmooze news let's use this verse as a spring board to talk about the correct way for a father to admonish his child. There is a beautiful insight to a verse in the book of Bereishis 45:8 which clarifies to us the definition of what it means to be a father: The verse states that Yosef said to his brothers “and now it was not you who sent me here, but G-d, he has made me a “father” to Pharaoh-Rashi comments that father here means “A friend and a Patron”. We see from here the Torah's concept of a father is someone who is a friend and a patron. Meaning a father should relate to his children in a friendly caring manner and to see to all their needs lovingly. Although he is an authority figure, he should not be threatening or intimidating to his children. Rav Shlomo Wolbe z”l one of the great masters of our generation on chinuch habonim (educating children) explains that if a parents whole approach is about when to punish, it undermines the entire relationship with one's child. You may ask doesn't king Solomon say in Mishlei 13:24 חוֹשֵׁךְ שֶׁבִטּוֹ שׁוֹנֵא בִּנּוֹ (one who spares the rod hates his child)? The answer to that question is what type of rod are we talking about. The purpose of the rod is to motivate the child to do the right thing. So, you can use a staff of pleasantness or a staff of blows. If I give a child encouragement I am using a staff. If a child does something good and I give them candy that's also a staff. The harm a parent does by yelling or screaming at a child not to mention hitting in today's generation is unfathomable. A parent therefore has no choice but to control him or herself and to work on their character traits not to become angry at every provocation, and this is especially important when dealing with teenagers. A parent has to find positive methods to convince his children to cooperate. Doing so takes a great deal of thought and planning, but it is much more effective than force, threats or harsh words, which are so unsuited to our generation. Yes, we have to have rules and yes there are consequences, but the key is to deal with it all in a pleasant manner otherwise it has the opposite effect. Is this easier said than done! Of course, but if your patient enough the nachas you will receive in the future will be more than worth it! Sefer: Aleinu L'shabeach

Wishing you an inspiring Shabbos!
