On this Yom Hashoah 70 years after the Holocaust, it would behoove us to set aside six minutes of silence to grieve – to remember, and to reflect upon the loss of six million of our brothers and sisters. This is more than just a staggering incomprehensible number, it represents the lives of every day innocent people who were murdered for only one reason: because they were Jews. I'm not sure how much the world has learned since then, but the real question is how much have we as Jews learned? At this seventy - year juncture we must redouble our efforts to make sure that those six million who died sanctifying G-d's name will continue to live on through us "the survivors". How does one go about doing that? It's by making sure that we live day in and day out sanctifying G-d's name. Whether it's in business, in Publix, or in the privacy of our own homes, as we go about our daily routine we must show the world that there is not a more noble and upright people on the face of the earth than Am Yisroel. Just maybe in that merit we will soon see the redemption of our people and the coming of a new dawn for the nation of Israel.

Wishing you a great and inspiring day!
