A sage was once asked “In what merit did you become the accepted leader of the generation? He answered “I never met any person in whom I did not detect some quality in which he was superior to me. If he was wiser than I, I suspected he was more G-d fearing. If he was less wise than I thought he was less accountable to G-d for his transgressions, for he sinned because of lack of knowledge and I sinned knowing full well what I was doing. If he was older, I would reason that the merits which he already acquired must exceed mine. If the man was richer, than perhaps his wealth has enabled him to surpass me in serving G-d. If he was poorer, I would consider him to be contrite and of a humbler spirit than I. Therefore I honored all men and humbled myself before them”.
