The Weekly Parsha

Parshas Vayishlach

By Rabbi Ozer Alport

“Therefore the Children of Israel are not to eat the displaced sinew on the hip socket to this day” (32:33)

In his commentary on Yoreh Deah, known as Kreisi U'Pleisi (65:16), Rav Yonason Eibeshutz records a fascinating historical incident. In his times, a m'nakeir (the person who removes the forbidden parts of an animal after it has been ritually slaughtered) created a scandal by announcing that what people had traditionally assumed was the forbidden gid ha'nashe (sciatic nerve), was anatomically incorrect. He identified a different nerve as being that which the Torah forbade. The ramifications of his claims were enormous. If he was correct, it would mean that all Jews around the world had forgotten the tradition identifying the forbidden nerve, and thus, had been consuming non-kosher food for generations!

Wherever the man went, he created quite an uproar, until he came to Rav Yonason's hometown of Prague. After listening to the man's claims, he investigated the matter, and found that the nerve which the man claimed was the genuine gid ha'nashe was one which is found only in male animals. After this discovery, he promptly took out a Sefer Halachos Gedolos, which states quite clearly that the prohibition of gid ha'nashe applies to both males and females. This would seem to refute the man's argument, as the nerve he alleged was the real forbidden one wasn't found in females. Rav Yonason concludes that the man was silenced and left in shame, his claims disproven.

The problem with this story is that the Sefer Halachos Gedolos writes that the prohibition against eating the sciatic nerve applies equally to male and female Jews, but makes no reference as to what kind of animal the forbidden nerve is found. How could Rav Yonason have made such a glaring oversight?

Some explain that the impossibility of all Jews erring in something so important was so clear to Rav Yonason that even before examining the man's actual claims, he had mentally dismissed the allegations. To quell the uproar the man had created, Rav Yonason simply wanted to “refute” him by any means possible. Because the man was simple and unlearned, he fell right into the trap.

However, the real answer is that there was a printing error in the original version of Kreisi

U'Pleisi, which stated that the refutation came from Somech-Heh-Gimmel when it should have read Somech-Heh-Nun. Because of the mistaken abbreviation, people reading it assumed that his source was Sefer Halachos Gedolos. However, it was Sefer HaNikur, which indeed says explicitly that the forbidden nerve is found in both male and female animals, and proves Rav Yonason's claims. Indeed, there is a Jew in Los Angeles with a copy of the original print of Kreisi U'Pleisi with the handwritten marginal corrections of Rav Yonason himself, and in the margin next to this line in the book is written this exact correction!

Hishtadlus and Tefillah – Partners in Success

Back in Parshas Toldos, Rivka instructs Yaakov to approach Yitzchak in the guise of Esav, to usurp his brother's blessing. Yaakov responds by suggesting to her, “Perhaps my father will feel me and I shall be as a mocker in his eyes; I will thus bring upon myself a curse rather than a blessing” (Bereishis 27:12), to which the Torah answers: “But his mother said to him, ‘Your curse be on me (עלי), my son’” (ibid. 27:13). The word עלי can be rendered as a remez to the three sources of contention, hardship and despair in Yaakov's life: Esav (ע), Lavan (ל), and Yosef (י), to teach us that although Rivka had accepted any curse upon herself, Yaakov's deception would still have repercussions of its own that would affect him throughout his lifetime. And, indeed they did, as no one can say that Yaakov had an easy life. Even Yaakov himself would agree, as he expressed to Paroah, “The days of the years of my sojourns have been a hundred and thirty years. Few and bad have been the days of the years of my life” (ibid. 47:9).

This week's parsha begins with Yaakov's return home to Eretz Canaan, and his imminent confrontation with his brother Esav. When Yaakov heard that Esav was approaching with 400 men, the Torah states: “Yaakov became very frightened; and it distressed him” (ibid. 32:8). In the plain sense, Yaakov was apprehensive at the news that Esav was coming with a sizable army to attack him (Ramban). He was frightened that he would be killed, and distressed that, in defending himself, he might kill others (Rashi). Rashi explains that the “fright” and the “distress” were over two different considerations (Mizrachi). Distress is a stronger emotion than fear. The prospect that he might be forced to kill was more disturbing to Yaakov than the possibility that he might be killed (Ralbag; Artscroll Stone Chumash). Sfats

Emes offers a unique interpretation of his own on this verse: “Yaakov realized that someone on his spiritual level should be impervious to fear, yet much to his dismay, he sensed that he had succumbed to that very emotion. ‘Yaakov was afraid, and it distressed him’- he was distressed over the fact that he felt fear.”

One must wonder why exactly Yaakov was “frightened and distressed?” Did he not have faith in Hashem? After all, He had promised him, “Behold, I am with you; I will guard you wherever you go, and I will return you to this soil” (ibid. 28:15). Rashi explains Yaakov's lack of faith was not in Hashem but in himself. He answers, “My merits have been reduced and the truth that You have done me. Therefore, I am afraid lest since the time You promised me, I have become soiled with sin, and it will cause me to be given over into the hand of Esav” (Rashi on ibid. 32:11). The Midrash suggests two specific transgressions that prompted Yaakov's doubt: Yaakov said, “All these years Esav dwelt in Eretz Canaan. Perhaps You will say that he will attack me on the strength of having dwelled in the Land. Furthermore, all these years Esav remained and honored his parents. Perhaps he will attack me on the strength of having honored his father and mother” (Bereishis Rabbah 76:2). Yaakov feared that in his absence, Esav excelled in the mitzvos of yishuv Eretz Yisrael and kibbud av v'eim, and therefore was zoche to override Hashem's promise to protect him.

But instead of panicking, Yaakov devises three different strategies in preparation to confront Esav. First, hoping to bribe Esav, Yaakov sends several gifts consisting of droves of livestock and servants. Second, he divides his camp and prepares for battle, if Esav is not appeased by the gifts. Yaakov's third, and final preparation, is to daven to Hashem to save him: “G-d of my father Avraham and G-d of my father Yitzchak... Rescue me, please, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esav, for I fear him” (ibid. 32:10-12).

Why did Yaakov save his tefillah for the last stage of preparation? Shouldn't davening to Hashem in a time of need, especially to save one's life, be the first and most significant act of preparation? Rabbi Noach Weinberg answers with, “Yaakov Avinu's decision to make prayer his third and final act of preparation teaches us a crucial lesson about the interplay between prayer (tefillah) and taking responsibility (hishtadlus). Prayer is only appropriate once we have undertaken as much responsibility as we possibly can. In the absence of assuming responsibility, we can cloak ourselves in self-righteousness, and use prayer as an escape from our obligations. This is antithetical to what Hashem wants from us.”

Tefillah and true emunah remind us that, ultimately, everything comes from Hashem. But it is not effective until we have first done our hishtadlus, and demonstrated to Him that we are doing everything within our means to resolve the situation on our own. This is what, I believe, the Torah is teaching us by showing how Yaakov did his hishtadlus first, by sending gifts of appeasement and preparing for battle, before he petitioned Hashem with his tefillah. Rav Shlomo Wolbe writes: "Although we must invest whatever effort is necessary in a particular endeavor, we should never lose sight of Who is really in charge. Along with our efforts, we must also pray to Hashem to help us succeed, because hishtadlus and tefillah go hand in hand" (Shiurei Chumash, Vayishlach, introduction 32:9). I had a chavrusa who would say, "You do your best and Hashem does the rest." No matter how righteous a person may be, he should not rely solely on miracles or Divine Assistance; rather, one must first put in his hishtadlus, and then ask the Almighty for His help. I believe that is the lesson we learn here from Yaakov Avinu. A gutten Shabbos.
