Weekly “What’s Your Shailah?” with Rabbi Yehuda Leib Goldberger

Dear Kehila Kedosha,

Per the request of many members of the kehilla, I would like to continue to write this column on a weekly basis. One way to help keep it going is by asking your shailos, either in person or by email: rabbijlg@gmail.com. I cannot guarantee that any particular question will become the subject of this column (although many of them do); however, your questions will certainly make it easier to choose a specific topic for discussion. I also believe that when the shailah comes from someone in our kehilla, it takes on a new and personal dimension. Ki Heim Chayeinu - literally! So please, ask away, and perhaps you will find your answer in the next Lev Echad!

-Rabbi Yehuda Leib

Question: On Shabbos, we are not allowed to write. Even writing one letter is Biblically forbidden; however, one is only obligated to bring a Korban Chatas if they write two letters. What if they wrote one Chinese character, which denotes an entire word?

Answer: They would not be obligated to bring a Korban. The prohibition of writing is not dependent on how much information was conveyed; rather, it is the act of writing two letters. This is certainly something worth pondering, and I encourage the reader to give it some thought. Perhaps letters are significant because of their precise definition and potential message-giving ability.

The Mishna in Meseches Shabbos clearly states that one is not chayeiv a Korban for writing a one letter acronym. Rashi and other Rishonim explain that this is even where one placed an apostrophe next to the letter in order to make it clear that it is an acronym. Thus, the prohibition of writing is not based on how much information was communicated, but on the specific act of forming letters. Another proof is that the Mishna says you are chayeiv a Korban for writing two simanios. The Rambam understands this to mean numerals (e.g., 1, 2, etc.). The numeral 1 conveys just as much information as the numeral 12, as both equally quantify something. Nonetheless, you are only chayeiv a Korban if you write two numerals. Yet another proof is, according to some Rishonim, you are chayeiv even if you write two letters that do not form a word. Nothing has been communicated, but you are still chayeiv a Korban.

There is another possible angle on this question, but the answer is the same. It is possible to bring a Korban even if one did not write two letters. The Rambam writes that one who produces a sketch is also chayeiv a Korban. The Mishna Brura (in the Biur Halacha) maintains that the source of the Rambam’s ruling is a Yerushalmi, and it is clear in the source that you are chayeiv for even one sketch. This is because a sketch is more significant than a letter. Perhaps this means that the communication is more clear and readily understandable. However, based on the same Yerushalmi, the Mishna Brura also writes that the prohibition against producing a drawing is because of communicating to another person what they should color in. A clear message has been given. (Drawing a picture without using an outline first would be makeh b’patish or tzovea.) Despite the fact that writing is not dependent on how much was communicated (as stated in the first paragraph), this only applies when using letters. When drawing, however, the communication is better, and even one drawing is significant. (It’s also logical from the standpoint that most drawings require the same quantity of writing as two letters.)

One might take the position that a Chinese letter should be like drawing a picture. However, to the best of my knowledge (i.e., my googling abilities), although some Chinese letters originate as pictograms (a character/letter which is a picture of what it denotes), in their current form they do not resemble what they denote. The character which means sun does not resemble the sun. Furthermore, according to the Mishna Brura’s aforementioned explanation, there would need to be something to color in (at least potentially), and there is nothing to color in here. A Chinese character is a stick figure at best. It is therefore like any other letter, and does not have the status of a drawing. Hieroglyphics from ancient Egypt, on the other hand, would seem to be in the category of a picture, and you would be chayeiv for drawing one of them.

-Rabbi Yehuda Leib

Selective Memory

In the opening pasukim of Sefer Shemos, the Torah states, “A new king arose over Mitzraim, who did not know of Yosef” (Shemos 1:8). There is a machlokes in the Gemara (Sotah 11a) between Rav and Shmuel on the rendering of this pasuk: One says this means a new king, in the literal sense; and the other one says it was the same king who was the ruler during the lifetime of Yosef, but he issued new edicts (Shemos Rabbah 1:8). According to the opinion that this was the same Paroah who ruled during Yosef’s lifetime, it must be understood to mean that he acted as if he did not know Yosef (Sifsei Chachamim). In other words, Paroah had “selective memory.”

The Merriam-Webster dictionary defines selective memory as “the tendency to remember only what one wants to remember.” Certainly, Paroah did not forget Yosef; not only did he make Paroah the wealthiest man in the entire world, but Yosef also saved him, his country, and the rest of the world from starvation during the famine years. To suggest that Paroah, whether it be a new Paroah or the one who reigned alongside Yosef, did not know Yosef would be like saying that John Adams or Thomas Jefferson did not know George Washington! In his arrogance, Paroah simply chose to not know Yosef through selective memory.

The Torah teaches us a great deal about the human psyche. For instance, by the meraglim we learn that “people see what they want to see,” and by Bilaam and Korach we see that “people believe what they want to believe.” The mind is a powerful tool, and one can easily deceive oneself into perceiving things as they see fit, and can use those distorted beliefs to influence others. In the case of Paroah, we see how he uses selective memory to discount the knowledge that he was deeply indebted to Yosef, enabling Paroah to, without any feelings of guilt or betrayal, enslave and persecute the Jewish people. How quickly the German people “forgot” that it was the Jews who rebuilt their collapsed economy after the first World War, allowing Germany to once again thrive and prosper.

We find throughout the course of Jewish history many examples of “selective memory” that lead to rampant anti-Semitism, and the persecution of our people that always follows. All one needs to do is take a look at today’s headlines to see how the world, the UN in particular, suffers from a “selective memory,” and is spreading anti-Semitism and disdain for the Jewish people across the globe. There is not a single historian or archaeologist in the world who will dispute the fact that the “Western Wall” is the last remaining remnant of the Second Temple. Yet the heritage and rightful ownership of the land continues to be challenged. How can the world possibly choose to acquiesce to the so-called “Palestinians” and deny the fact that Yerushalayim and the entire Land of Israel belong exclusively to the Jewish people? How can the world accuse Israel of somehow infringing upon the “rights” of these Arabs by expanding the settlements to accommodate a growing Jewish population?

The fact remains that the Kosel stands today as a constant reminder that the Beis HaMikdash, the “Holy Temple,” once stood there, and served as the epicenter of Jewish life for centuries. There is no disputing that Yerushalayim belongs to the Jewish people, yet the rest of the world somehow does not agree. The truth is, there will never be a “two-state” system in Yerushalayim, as neither party would ever agree to divide and share the land. The Arabs will never live peaceably among the Jews in Israel, no matter what Israel has to offer them. What the rest of the world fails to recognize is that the only deal that the Arabs are willing to make results in their total control of the land, and total annihilation of the Jewish people. Not a good deal for Hashem’s chosen people!

It seems that the world has a selective memory, and has “forgotten” that in 1948, Israel was declared a “Jewish State,” and purely out of kindness and consideration for human life, has allowed the Arabs who live there to remain, granting them citizenship, and providing them opportunities in education and employment that they are not granted anywhere in the entire Arab world. Somehow it was “forgotten” that the Six-Day War victory granted Israel the unconditional right to control the site known as the “Temple Mount,” and the surrounding areas. What is going on here? Is the whole world suffering from amnesia? What really caused Paroah to “forget” Yosef?

I believe the answer is alluded to in our parsha. The pasuk preceding our verse states, “The Children of Israel were fruitful, teemed, increased, and became strong – very, very much so; and the land became filled with them” (Shemos 1:7). The Midrash (Yalkut Shimoni 1:7) explains that the Jews in Mitzraim were everywhere: Rabbi Yochanan says, “They filled the theatres and circuses, and this caused the immediate decree that the Jews must be separated from them.” Rav Noach Weinberg writes: “After the death of Yosef and his brothers, the Jews in Egypt were assimilating. As a result, the Egyptians began to detest them, and sought to remove them from their midst. This was the first demonstration in Jewish history of the spiritual axiom built into the fabric of the universe: assimilation generates anti-Semitism. What will ultimately stop the assimilation? Hashem unleashes the hatred of the non-Jews to keep them from assimilating.” As Rav Chaim Volozhin famously said, “If the Jews don’t make Kiddush, the non-Jews will make Havdalah.”

So, what is the Torah teaching us here? Assimilation always leads to anti-Semitism, which tends to make the world “forget” its own history. May the Jewish people be zoche to achdus and a universal observance of the Torah, and may Hashem bring shalom to Eretz Yisroel. אנה ה' הושיעה נא! A gutten Shabbos.
