The Weekly Parsha

Weekly "What's Your Shailah?" with Rabbi Yehuda Leib Goldberger

Question: I know that making a bracha on wine covers other beverages. Does it cover soup as well?

Answer: A soup which has no solid food in it, and whose bracha is a Shehakol, is covered by the bracha on the wine. There is, however, some question about a broth whose bracha is HaAdamah (the details of when a broth alone has the bracha of HaAdamah is beyond the scope of this article). The Ketzos HaShulchan infers from the words of the Shulchan Aruch Harav that the bracha on wine only covers beverages which are a Shehakol. The Ketzos HaShulchan suggests this is because a soup whose bracha is a HaAdamah is considered like the vegetable itself, and does not have the status of a beverage, but remains in doubt regarding this ruling. However, the Magen Avraham clearly agrees with this ruling, and states that wine does not cover a fig beer whose bracha is HaEitz. Therefore, the bracha on wine would not cover a soup whose bracha is a HaAdama.

There is also some question in regard to a soup which is a Shehakol, but has some pieces of food in it (e.g. chicken soup with a little chicken). There is a disagreement among the Acharonim about the bracha on wine covering sugar cubes that were consumed along with coffee. (The sugar was not dissolved in the coffee; rather, it was placed in the mouth while drinking the coffee.) The Chasam Sofer opines that the sugar cube is secondary to the coffee, and in the same way the wine covers the coffee, it covers the sugar cube as well. The Chayeh Adam writes that this would only be true if the person drank from the coffee before he derived pleasure from the sugar cube. If, however, he put the sugar cube in his mouth first, it would not be covered by the wine, and it would require its own bracha. He further states that it would be better to eat the sugar cube first, and make a shehakol on it. The Bior Halacha brings both opinions. The Kaf Hachaim says that even if you drank the coffee first, exempting the sugar cubes from making a Shehakol is arguable. Therefore, he writes that you should eat some sugar by itself with the intent to enjoy it by itself, and not as part of the coffee. This is not considered an unnecessary bracha since you are trying to avoid this arguable situation.

The same discussion would apply to small pieces of chicken in a soup. The best possible resolution would be to recite a Shehakol over some other food, or to follow the Kaf HaChaim's advice and eat some pieces of chicken first, and say a Shehakol on them. This argument is only applicable to small pieces of chicken; larger pieces are automatically not considered secondary to the soup, and they would certainly not be covered by the bracha on the wine.

Ice cream and other frozen liquids are not covered with the bracha over wine unless they have melted and can be poured like a liquid.

-Rabbi Yehuda Leib

The Power of Moshe's Prayers

Parshas Va'eschanan begins with, "I implored (va'eschanan) Hashem at that time, saying, 'My Lord, Hashem/Elokim, You had begun to show your servant Your greatness...'" (Devarim 3:23-24). Rashi states "I implored" is one of ten terms for prayer. It is used when one seeks an undeserved favor, for truly righteous and humble people never feel that they have a claim on G-d's mercy. The Midrash states that Moshe petitioned Hashem 515 times to annul the decree forbidding him to enter Eretz Yisroel, alluded to by the gematria of the word va'eschanan, which is 515 (Yalkut Shimoni Devarim 940). The P'nei Yehoshua (Berachos 32a) suggests that these 515 prayers to Hashem can also be mathematically derived. Before the conquest of the lands of Sichon and Og, Rashi states that "Moshe's prophecy returned with Hashem assuring him of his impending victory. After Moshe had conquered the mighty Sichon and Og, whose lands were among those given to Israel, Moshe hoped that this display of G-d's 'greatness and strong hand' (v. 24) meant that perhaps he might indeed be permitted to enter the Land as well, so he prayed for the right to cross the Yarden." According to the Gemara, Moshe began his pleas on the 15th of Av (Bava Basra 121a, Rashi 2:17). From the 15th of Av until the day of Moshe's death, the 7th of Adar, there are exactly 200 days. If Moshe davened for the annulment during each of the three daily prayers, he would have petitioned a total of 600 times. However, one does not make personal requests on Shabbos, of which there were 28 during this period. If you subtract 84 from 600, you are left with 516. Since Moshe's prophecy did not return to him until the morning of the 15th of Av, he did not ask Hashem to annul the decree by Maariv, leaving him with precisely 515 supplications until the day of his death.

Rashi describes "You had begun to show Your servant" as an opening to engage in prayer, although the decree had already been issued. Moshe said to Hashem, "I have learned from You. For You told me, 'And now, let go of Me.' Was I holding on to You? But You told me this to make an opening for me, by letting me know that it depended upon me to pray for them. I was under the impression that I should act in a similar manner now." This, Moshe understood, was perhaps G-d indicating to him that there might be a continuation to this course of action (Mizrachi; Gur Aryeh). On "Your greatness," Rashi states: "This is the Attribute of Your Kindness." Rav Shlomo Wolbe defines performing acts of kindness as one of the defining characteristics of greatness. He writes, "Chazal tell us that Avraham Avinu personified kindness. Avraham proved that true greatness is measured by one's kindness to others. Hashem's greatness lies in the very fact that He takes an interest in our lowly world, sustains us, and cares for our every need. Avraham's belief in divine Providence caused him to understand the parameters of true greatness."

The Baal Shem Tov explained that people fail to treat prayer with the proper esteem, since they are disappointed when their prayers go unanswered. The truth is, according to Rav Asher Weiss, that no prayer is ever ignored, nor does any prayer ever go to waste. He writes, "Hashem answers all our prayers in a manner that He alone knows is best for us. Sometimes our prayers are answered directly, and we receive exactly what we requested. Sometimes we receive something even better, but are not even aware it came about as a result of our prayers." So what happened to all of Moshe's 515 prayers?

Rav Asher Weiss answers, "Regarding Moshe Rabbeinu's 515 prayers, it is interesting to note that the world as we know it is destined to exist for a span of 6,000 years. However, the Midrash gives a more precise figure of 6,093 years (Midrash Osiyos D'Rebbe Akiva). Moshe supplicated Hashem with his 515 prayers in the final year of his life, which was 2,488 after Creation, and 3,605 years before its completion. The world's existence is divided into seven-year Shemittah cycles -- 3,605 divided by 7 equals 515. Therefore, it seems that although Moshe's prayers were not answered for his own benefit, they were not rejected outright, but instead reserved for the benefit of Bnei Yisroel; one prayer for every seven-year cycle of Shemittah. This merit guards us until the end of time, and ensures our ultimate return to our Land."

The Talmud teaches us that prayer stands at the heights of the universe (Berachos 6b), reaching a place in Heaven far loftier than man can discern. Therefore, we are often unable to understand the relationship between our prayers and the blessing that results from them. We should never underestimate the power of prayer. Although we may pray on our own behalf, we may receive in return blessing for our children or grandchildren for many generations to come. May we all be zoche to have our prayers answered by Hashem, regardless of how He chooses to answer them, and appreciate that everything He does is for our own benefit. A gutten Shabbos.

JobKatif's Vision of Chesed

In previous years, JobKatif has been busy integrating the significant majority of displaced former residents of Gush Katif into a productive workplace. As Rav Yosef Zvi Rimon, chairman and founder of JobKatif, stated: "If G-d blessed us with this idea to create a new employment model certainly non-existent in Israel... why not adapt it to help other sectors suffering on the fringes of Israeli society."

This year, JobKatif has branched out into four new avenues of chesed, all towards the goal of 'paving a new future through employment' Achotenu: A revolutionary nursing program for young Ethiopian men and women, enabling them to enter a five-year academic nursing program at Hebrew University's School of Nursing. Ta'asuchayil: a unique employment program coordinated with the IDF designed to help impoverished soldiers find work during their service. Ta'asukati: individualized mentoring for the chronically unemployed. Haboydem: an innovative social business, offering
