The Weekly Parsha

Parshas Mattos/Masei

By Rabbi Ozer Alport

“For he must dwell in his city of refuge... and after the death of the Kohen Gadol, the killer shall return to the land of his possession” (35:28)

The Torah requires a person who accidentally kills another Jew to flee to one of the cities of refuge. In order to be protected from the deceased’s relative and blood-avenger, he must remain there until the death of the Kohen Gadol, at which point he is permitted to return to his community and family. The Meshech Chochmah derives from a verse in Parshas Chukas (20:29) that although this law was applicable during the 40-year sojourn of the Jews in the wilderness, with the accidental killer required to dwell in the camp of the Levites (Rashi Shemos 21:13), an accidental killing never actually occurred during this entire period.

The Torah relates that upon the death of Aharon, every member of the Jewish nation cried and mourned his death. Rashi explains that this was due to his tremendous efforts to make peace between quarreling parties. The Meshech Chochmah notes, however, that had there been even a single accidental murderer during this period, he wouldn’t have cried at the death of Aharon – the Kohen Gadol – but rather would have rejoiced at the event which secured his freedom!

However, the Matamei Yaakov questions this proof. It is entirely possible that there was an accidental killer who was exiled to the Levite camp but who died prior to the death of Aharon, which occurred during the last year of their 40-year sojourn in the wilderness. As such, the fact that at the time of Aharon’s death every living Jew mourned his passing doesn’t constitute an absolute indication that there were no accidental killings during this period.

Life Is a Journey

Parshas Masei opens with an entire chapter which details the forty-two encampments during Bnei Yisroel’s forty-year journey from Mitzraim to the Plains of Moav, opposite the Yarden, their final stop before entering the Land. Rashi, citing R’ Moshe HaDarshan, states that the Torah’s list of journeys emphasizes G-d’s compassion, because it shows that, notwithstanding the decree that they wander in the midbar for forty years, the people enjoyed extended periods of rest. Of the forty-two encampments, the first fourteen took place before the meraglim were dispatched to spy out the land, and the last eight encampments were in the fortieth year. Thus, during the thirty-eight years in between, the Bnei Yisroel only encamped in twenty different places. Ramban notes that the Torah stresses that G-d commanded Moshe, as the verse states, “Moshe wrote their goings forth according to their journeys at the bidding of Hashem...” (Bamidbar 33:2), to record these places to intimate that great secrets are contained in the forty-two journeys. Indeed, the Magen Avraham (428:8) cites Tzror HaMor that the forty-two journeys allude to the forty-two Letter Name of G-d, and therefore, the Torah reading should not be interrupted during the reading of these places (Artscroll Stone Chumash).

The Malbim writes: “The reason Hashem made the Bnei Yisroel wander in the midbar for forty years instead of bringing them directly into the Land was that the Jewish people in Mitzraim were so deeply mired in the impurity of their host culture that they could not extricate themselves from it all at once, as we see several times in the wilderness where they returned to their waywardness. Forty years of wanderings, trials and tribulations served to refine the Jewish people gradually, little by little purifying them of all dross, until they could shed completely the soiled garb of Egyptian culture to don the pure, holy robes of purity and holiness” (Artzos HaShalom, Derush 2).

Rashi, citing Tanchuma, describes the journey with the following meshal: “This can be compared to a king whose son was ill, and he took him to a different place to cure him. Once they started back, his father began to count all the journeys. He said to his son, ‘Here we slept. Here we felt cold. Here you had a headache, etc.’” At the end of the painful journey, the king recapitulated for his son all that he had gone through on the son’s account, to remind the son of how much he loves him. Here, too, G-d recapitulates for Israel the events of the forty-year sojourn in the wilderness, to remind them of His love for them, and inspire them to reciprocate. “We slept” represents the times Israel was at peace. “We felt cold” represents the times Israel felt they were lacking something. “You had a headache” represents the times Israel was in danger (Tanchuma 3; Gur Aryeh).

It is said that every individual Jew goes through forty-two different stages of growth in his or her lifetime, corresponding to the forty-two stations in the midbar. We are now in the midst of Bein Hametzarim, the three-week period between the seventeenth of Tammuz and the ninth of Av, a mournful period of commemoration of the devastating calamities that occurred on those two dates in Jewish history. I learned in a shiur last week given by Rabbi Dovid Jaffee an absolutely amazing concept brought down in Avodas Yisroel, written by the Koznitzer Maggid, who explains that there is a parallel between Bein Hametzarim and the forty-two encampments described in our parsha. Parshas Masei always falls out during the “three-weeks” to teach us that this is a most propitious time for teshuvah and character refinement. Three weeks have twenty-one days and twenty-one nights; when combined it equals forty-two, corresponding to the forty-two stops in the wilderness. Thus, just as the Bnei Yisroel experienced forty-two different journeys in the midbar, each one bringing them closer to a more refined and purified state of being, so, too, are we given forty-two “opportunities” for reflection and self-improvement during this period of Bein Hametzarim. Each day and each night represent a different station in the midbar. With the proper mindset, we can use this period of time to work on improving ourselves each day and night, to prepare for the month of Elul, the ultimate time for teshuvah.

According to the Nesivos Shalom, the seforim hakedoshim observe that the forty-two journeys correspond to the forty-two words of Ana Bekoach, which has seven lines of six words each. These lines in turn correspond to the seven lower sefiros, each one considered in its combination with the other six. Toras Avos explained that the upshot of this observation is to expand our conception of our task and job in this world. We understand that we are obligated to meticulously heed all the expectations of halachah in performing all the mitzvos. Beyond that, however, waits another job description. Each of us comes into the world for the purpose of making some contribution to, some tikkun in, each of the midos through which Hashem relates to the world. The scope of this task is alluded to in the forty-two journeys.

The Malbim, quoting the Abarbanel, adds: “The Torah details these various encampments to serve as a portent of the future; that before the Final Redemption, the Jews will go into an exile that will be like an impossible journey through the wilderness where the Jewish people will be banished from mainstream society, forced to wander from place to place alone and unto themselves as though dwelling in a parched wasteland. Surely there is a hidden relationship whereby each travel of Bnei Yisroel listed here maps a ‘wilderness’ of exile, sojourning, and to all that transpired therein and throughout the long history of the Diaspora.” Malbim concludes with, “Moshe was therefore commanded to record these specific travels as a remembrance for the future, for the End of Days, for these travels served as a testimony to all that would happen to the Jewish people at the End of Days.”

Life is a journey! May we all be zoche to continue to grow with each new stage of life and use these three weeks to improve our ways and prepare for Elul, as we inch our way toward the Final Redemption and the Coming of Moshiach. A gutten Shabbos.
