Yom Kippur-Sukkos-Simchas Torah

Weekly "What's Your Shailah?" with Rabbi Yehuda Leib Goldberger

Question: Why do people smell spices on Yom Kippur? (Thanks to our gabbai, Jay Taffel, for providing them.) And how do we determine whether the bracha on a fragrance is "borei minei / atzei / isvei besamim?"

Answer: The qualifications for the bracha "borei atzei besamim" are subject to a dispute amongst Rishonim. Some Rishonim hold that as long as the plant is hard [woody], then the bracha of "borei atzei besamim" is recited. They cite proofs that eitz refers to hard plants; soft, grass-like plants get a bracha of "isvei" [grasses].

Other Rishonim hold that we use the same rules which determine "borei pri haetz" and "borei pri haadamah" i.e., eitz means tree. Therefore, the fact that the plant is hard is not sufficient to recite "borei atzei besamim"; it must be considered a tree. For the bracha of "borei pri haetz," leaves must grow from shoots, not directly from the root, and the shoots/branches from which the fruit grows must last year to year. If they fall off every year, the plant is not considered to be a tree, and a "haadamah" is recited. This same rule would apply to besamim as well. If these criteria are not met, it is not a tree, and "borei isvei besamim" is recited, not "borei atzei besamim."

The Mishna Brura remains undecided on the matter, and says that for a hard plant which does not have all the criteria for a tree, a "borei minei besamim" is recited. Minei is a catch-all bracha for scents, similar to a shehakol for foods, and is recited whenever there is a doubt as to the correct bracha. It is also recited on fragrances which are not plant-based. There are also other brachos for smelling fruit (which leads to a dispute over cloves); however, I have never heard anyone make such a bracha. Perhaps I will address this in a future issue. [Note: For Havdalah, we always say "borei minei besamim"].

A person is supposed to recite 100 brachos every day. On Yom Kippur, due to the fast and the fact that there are fewer brachos in davening than on a weekday, this is not so easy. One way to make up the brachos is to make a bracha on spices. It is interesting to note that there seems to be a contradiction in the Mishna Brura as to whether or not this is necessary. In one place he cites the practice of making brachos on besamim. Later, in the halachos of Yom Kippur, the Rema writes that we do not recite "Ein Keilokeinu" on Yom Kippur. Most Acharonim state the reason for saying "Ein Keilokeinu" is that it corresponds to the eighteen brachos of Shemoneh Esrei. On Yom Kippur there are other piutim that correspond to a weekday Shemoneh Esrei (e.g., "Ahelecha b'kol ram" in Shacharis). However, the Mishna Brura brings the explanation of the Taz that we usually say "Ein Keilokeinu" on Shabbos and Yom Tov to make up for the 100 brachos. However, on Yom Kippur we say many praises of Hashem, and this is not necessary. This is in accordance with the Rishonim who say that praises of Hashem count towards the 100 brachos; they do not need the formal structure of a bracha to be counted. It is strange that the Mishna Brura brings down this reason, when most other Acharonim bring down the other, specifically in light of the apparent contradiction to making brachos on spices, which is brought down by virtually all Acharonim. On the other hand, it is not clear to me how "Ein Keilokeinu" corresponds to the weekday Shemoneh Esrei, for there are twenty statements of praise in "Ein Keilokeinu," not eighteen [or even nineteen, if we include V'lamalshinim].

Sifting through the Layers

Everyone has their own "pet peeves" in life, certain things that really bother them for which they have little to zero tolerance. Mine happens to be litter. When I lived in Cross Country Manor, I used to cut through the driveway that connects Wallis Avenue to the alley behind our shul. One Shabbos morning while walking up the driveway to shul, I noticed an inordinate amount of litter scattered everywhere. After Shabbos was over, I decided to go back the next day and clean it all up myself. After all, this was the Shabbos between Rosh Hashana and Yom Kippur, and I could not bear to go another week with it looking that way.

I put Akiva Simcha in his stroller, threw in a bottle of Powerade, a box of disposable gloves and a box of trash bags, and set off to clean up the mess. It was hot and humid that day, but I was determined. By the time I got there, Akiva Simcha was sound asleep, so I parked the stroller in the shade and took out a pair of gloves and a trash bag and got to work. After forty minutes or so, I had picked up all the litter that I saw in the driveway - paper plates, plastic forks, food wrappers, napkins, plastic cups, bags, cardboard, you name it. By the time I finished, I had collected two or three bags full of trash! The sweat was dripping off me, and as I chugged down some of my Powerade and wiped off my face, I noticed some more litter sticking up from the leaves that were piled up along the side of the building. When I reached down to pick it up, I noticed even more trash under the many layers of leaves. I sifted through the top layers and filled another bag or two with all the litter that I had pulled out, and then... I saw even more. By now, I was completely drenched in sweat, exhausted and exasperated, and needed to take a break, so I sat down in the shade next to my sleeping baby to finish my Powerade. There seemed to be no end in sight, as each layer of leaves covered yet another layer of leaves, with plenty more debris in between. I realized that unless I wanted to be there all day, I had to accept that what I had accomplished thus far was going to have to be good enough. I felt like I had won the battle, but lost the war. I resolved to call it a day.

During my respite from the heat, I began to contemplate the situation, and had somewhat of an epiphany - a feeling that through this very mundane, back-breaking work, Hashem was sending me a deep message about myself, a mashal of sorts. The seemingly endless amount of litter represented my aveiros; some could be seen on the surface and easily removed, and some were deeply buried in the many layers below the surface and removing them would require much more effort. Just like the litter, there was too much to "clean up" in one day, and I realized the meaning behind the mashal - that teshuvah is not done in just one day, even if that day is Rosh Hashana.

It seems to me that we are more easily prone to rid ourselves of the sins that can be detected on the surface, that result from our actions and misdeeds, and perhaps with determination, that could be accomplished with one Rosh Hashana. But the real challenge during this time, as Rabbi Goldberger pointed out in his Shabbos Shuvah drasha, is to rid ourselves of the sins buried deep inside - the deficiencies in our middos. The Rabbi, quoting the Rambam, explained that one should not think that he must only do teshuvah for his actions and misdeeds, for one must also do teshuvah for the bad middos that lead one to commit those actions and misdeeds. The Rambam writes: "A person should not think that teshuvah is only necessary for those sins that involve deeds such as lewdness, robbery, or theft. Rather, just as a person is obligated to repent from these, similarly, he must search after the evil qualities [middos] he has. He must repent from anger, hatred, envy, frivolity, the pursuit of money and honor, gluttony, and the like. He must repent for all [of the above]" (Hilchos Teshuvah 7:3).

Although it is true that we must work on correcting our misdeeds, we must also focus on the more difficult task of correcting our bad middos. My rebbe at the Kollel, Reb Shragi Baumgarten, used to say that teshuvah is not a point [that one reaches], rather that it is a process – one that takes a lifetime to achieve. Refinement of one's character and middos is an essential element in doing teshuvah; and just as it would have taken me all day to clean up all those leaves and all the litter buried beneath them, so, too, it takes a lifetime for one to do teshuvah. We are a "work-in-progress" until the day we take leave of this world, but every new day provides new opportunities for spiritual growth. May we all be zoche to be inscribed and sealed in the Book of Life, so we may continue to refine ourselves and our middos, to reach a level of teshuvah and return to our Father in Heaven.
