Weekly Parsha*Parshas Vayigash*Chaim in Mitzraim

“And they told him, saying, ‘Yosef is still alive,’ and that he is ruler over the entire land of Egypt; but he had a turn of heart, for he did not believe them.” (45:26)

When Yaakov’s sons told their father that Yosef was still alive, Yaakov did not believe them. How could this be? Yaakov had been in mourning for twenty-two years. There was no way that any one of his sons — let alone all of them together — would dare lie to their grief-stricken father. Was this simply a case of “I will believe it when I see it,” or is there something more profound for us to uncover?

Yaakov’s disbelief and skepticism is rooted in a deeper understanding of the word “alive.” According to Rav Yonatan Taub, who cites the Malbim, there are two modes of existence. To illustrate these ways of living, imagine two different people. The first wakes up in the morning, has a coffee, and surfs the Internet. Later on, he meets some friends at a bar, goes home to watch a movie or two, and goes to sleep. This person is no doubt medically and physically “alive,” but he is certainly not fulfilling his purpose in the world. He is merely gar — existing.

The second person wakes up thanking Hashem for a new day of life, washes netilas yadayim, davens with a minyan, eats breakfast, and makes a bracha on everything he eats. Then, he goes out to work with the intention of making money in order to raise a Torah-observant family and properly serve Hashem. Later, he exercises to keep the body that the Almighty has entrusted him with in the best shape possible so he will have more energy to help others. At night, he learns Torah, does chesed, and helps his wife with chores before going to bed. This person is living a directed and purposeful life. He is not just “gar,” he is “chai” — truly alive.

Mitzraim was a place of total hedonism, physicality, and self-indulgence. It would have been nearly impossible to find someone who was chai and not merely gar. Consequently, when Yaakov’s sons told him that Yosef was “chai” in Mitzraim — of all places — he had a tremendously difficult time believing them. The fact that Yosef could have been physically alive was one thing, but living an actualized and meaningful life in the midst of such depravity and frivolity was quite another.

In reality, Yosef HaTzaddik kept the mitzvos, had sterling middos, maintained his Torah values in the midst of unimaginable tests, and avoided the negative impact of the toxic environment in which he spent most of his life. When it came time for Yaakov and Yosef to be reunited, Yosef sent chariots to his father to come visit and witness all this for himself. Rashi reveals that Yosef chose to send an egel, a chariot, as a hint to his father that he remembered the last piece of Torah they had learned together, the parsha of egla arufa. Yosef did this not only to signal to Yaakov that he remembered the Torah they learned, but also to show him that it had such a significant impact on him even in Mitzraim. Upon seeing this, Yaakov finally knew that Yosef was truly alive. One of our main objectives in this world, and quite possibly one of the critical components of our very purpose, is to live a life of real chaim.

We should be zoche to be like Yosef HaTzaddik and to live a fully actualized life with genuine meaning and purpose no matter where we reside.

-Bob Barocas

The Moment of Clarity

“And Yosef said to his brothers, ‘I am Yosef. Is my father still alive?’ ... And he said, ‘I am Yosef your brother — it is me, whom you sold into Mitzraim... And now: It was not you who sent me here, but G-d; He has made me father to Paroah, master of his entire household, and ruler throughout the entire land of Mitzraim’” (Bereishis 45:3-8). Once Yosef identified himself to his brothers by saying “I am Yosef,” G-d’s master plan became crystal clear to his brothers. This was the climax - the final scene in this long melodrama between Yosef and his brothers. “They had no more questions. Everything that had happened for the last twenty-two years fell into perspective” (Artscroll Stone Chumash). The Chofetz Chaim writes, “So, too, will it be in the time to come when G-d will reveal Himself and announce, ‘I am Hashem!’ The veil will be lifted from our eyes, and we will comprehend everything that transpired throughout history.”

When Yosef uses the words “And now,” he emphasizes the word “now” because until this very moment, Yosef had surely blamed his brothers for their betrayal and mistreatment of him, but now he understood that they had been “tools in G-d’s hand” (Akeidah). As Yosef revealed himself to them, he and his brothers shared an epiphany; it became abundantly clear that everything that had transpired over the course of the twenty-two year period since Yosef was sold into slavery was Divinely orchestrated, and although they each played a separate role, all the while Yosef and his brothers were unaware that they were merely acting as “pawns on Hashem’s chessboard.”

Rav Shlomo Wolbe writes: “Yosef recognized that the entire sequence of events leading up to this phenomenal moment was a product of Hashem’s Hashgachah Pratis, and not a result of his brothers’ decision to sell him. By selling him, his brothers had intended to rid themselves of Yosef and his far-fetched dreams. In reality, however, their actions were the catalyst for the fulfillment of those dreams, and it was clear that the hand of Hashem had orchestrated all that had transpired.”

Sefer Bereishis is the “Book of Creation,” not only of the world and everything in it, but of the Jewish people. The Torah tells us the story of Avraham, Yitzchak and Yaakov, to lay the foundation for the Jewish people- our roots and humble beginnings. The last four parshios tell not only the story of Yosef and his brothers, but also set the stage for the exile and eventual servitude that was promised by G-d to Avraham. All the events described in these parshios are setting into motion the formation of the tribes and paving the way for the birth of Klal Yisroel. Although the course of events all appear to be the product of human free will, in reality, they are the product of what Rav Shlomo Wolbe describes as “preordained free will.”

Rav Wolbe continues, “Many people are confused as to what exactly bechirah is. Does Hashem allow events to unfold in accordance with people’s free will, or is everything preordained from Heaven, regardless of people’s choices? The answer can be found in Chovos HaLevavos (Avodas Elokim, Chapter 8), which writes that both are true: everything is dependent on our bechirah, and at the same time, everything is preordained by Hashem. In other words, we must make decisions as if we are solely responsible for the outcome of our actions. However, in the final analysis, Hashem will arrange things the way He sees fit.”

Sefer Bereishis is replete with stories that exemplify this concept of “preordained free will.” Two good examples of this are the episode of Lot and his daughters, and of Yehudah and Tamar. Although central to each story are what appear to be “free will” decisions (albeit illicit encounters typically forbidden by the Torah), each was necessary for the establishment of the Davidic line and the eventual birth of Moshiach. Therefore, these two episodes were clearly acts governed by “preordained free will.” Certainly, the entire story of Yosef and his brothers is no different; Hashem’s hand guided them through each and every step of the way, leading up to this final moment of clarity.

I believe the Torah is teaching us here the importance in having emunah and bitachon; to know that Hashem is guiding us every step of the way as well, and have the awareness and appreciation for His constant guidance and support. Rav Wolbe concludes, "We cannot know what Hashem's plans are, but He gave us seichel, the ability to discern, to calculate what is best for us and make decisions that seem right for us. Yet even if things turn out differently from the way we envision, we can be sure that what happens is what Hashem wants, and what is truly best for us" (Shiurei Chumash, Parshas Vayeishev 37:14). May we all be zoche to experience our own personal moments of clarity and see the yad of Hashem in our lives, no matter the circumstances or situation in which we may find ourselves at that moment in time. A gutten Shabbos.
