Weekly ParshaParshas Bamidbar

By Rabbi A. Leib Scheinbaum

“Moshe counted them according to the word of Hashem, as he had been commanded” (3:16)

Rashi cites the dialogue that ensued between Moshe Rabbeinu and Hashem concerning the counting of the infants. Moshe asked, “How can I enter into their tents to ascertain the number of nursing infants?” Clearly, it would be a breach of modesty. Hashem replied, “You do that which is yours to do, and I will do that which is Mine.” Thus, Moshe would go and stand at the entrance to the tent, and the Divine Presence would precede him there. A Heavenly Voice would emanate from the tent and say, “There is such and such a number of babies in the tent.” This is the underlying meaning of al pi Hashem, “according to the word of Hashem.”

It seems like a wonderful process. Moshe walks over to the tent, and Hashem calls out the number of babies. Why only the babies? Why did they not employ this process for everyone? Indeed, why did Moshe have to go to the camp altogether? He could have remained in his “office” and recorded all of the numbers, “according to the word of Hashem.”

Horav Baruch Mordechai Ezrachi explains that this is the principle that prevails throughout all avenues of life’s endeavors. The person acts, and when his actions have reached the limit of his ability- when he can achieve no more, Heaven responds and “takes over,” completing the initiative. He must make the effort- he must put forth his endeavor before Divine assistance is merited. Therefore, concerning the other individuals to be counted, Hashem had no reason to intervene; Moshe could do the census on his own. Since, concerning the infants he was prevented from completing the count due to reasons of immodesty, Heaven intervened.

Knowing One’s Place

Sefer Bamidbar begins with Hashem’s command to Moshe to take another census of the Jewish people in the midbar: “Take a census of the entire assembly of the Children of Israel according to their families...” (Bamidbar 1:2). Rashi points out that by this census, the Bnei Yisroel were counted by tribes; the earlier censuses [in Sefer Shemos] had counted the nation as a whole, without recognizing separate tribal identities (Bechor Shor). Rav Yaakov Kamenetsky explains why the censuses of Shemos counted the nation as a whole, whereas those of Bamidbar counted the tribes separately: “Until it was established that the central motif in Jewish life is the Sanctuary, there was a danger that one’s identification with his own tribe would lead to ‘nationalism’ and factionalism. Once it was established that all the tribes looked to the Mishkan as their primary unifying force, the establishment of separate tribal identities would be healthy. With this understanding, each tribe would realize that its individual abilities should be developed for the service of Israel’s national goal of Heavenly service. Then the tribes would be separate only in terms of the unique roles they were to play in realizing the national destiny” (Artscroll Stone Chumash).

Parshas Bamidbar describes the hierarchy of the Jewish people and the formation in which they traveled. It identifies the nesi'im, the tribal leaders, and how the twelve shevatim are divided into four different camps, consisting of three tribes each, one of which led the camp. Finally, the Bnei Levi are assigned their specific responsibilities, according to their family, regarding the deconstruction of and traveling with the Mishkan and its vessels, as well as their place of encampment around the Ohel Moed. The formation of the Jewish people and different encampments around the Mishkan defined the place of each Jew as the nation traveled through the midbar, and enabled the individual to know his place.

Knowing one’s place is essential to Torah life. Certain people were born to lead, others to follow. Each person has certain strengths and weaknesses, attributes and flaws, abilities and shortcomings. It is incumbent upon each individual to know himself and recognize those things with which Hashem has blessed him, to assume his individual role and define his specific mission. Knowing one’s place is so important that it is listed as one of the forty-eight ways by which Torah is acquired (Avos 6:6). According to Tiferes Yisroel, this refers to self-knowledge. One must have an honest estimate of himself and recognize his own inadequacies in knowledge and wisdom. As Maharal writes: “Only one who senses he is lacking something will seek out the Torah, which brings completion to the incomplete” (Artscroll Pirkei Avos Treasury).

Rav Noach Weinberg writes: “Hamakir es mekomo, knowing your place, starts with understanding your personal makeup: your unique traits, talents, abilities, and knowledge. Having this requisite self-understanding helps one determine when it is appropriate to speak up or take action, and when it is appropriate to remain silent or let others take the lead. In order to respond to situations correctly, you need to know your place. A true leader does not push himself into the limelight in order to gain attention and fame. He takes responsibility when there is a clear and definite need, but he is fully prepared to take the backseat when that is what the situation calls for.”

Knowing one’s place is knowing who you are; knowing from where you came, and where you are headed. I believe this understanding is an essential element for spiritual growth. We all know the areas in which we excel, and those areas which need improvement. To grow spiritually, one must be honest with oneself and truly committed to self-improvement. I have found that one derech towards spiritual growth is through the emulation of a tzaddik - someone that you recognize to be a “few steps” ahead on the path that you wish to travel. When Reb Shuki Nissan was here, I took every opportunity I could to learn with him. And I learned so much from him, not only from mamash the Torah that we learned together, but also by observing his middos and overall demeanor. Not to be him, but to aspire to be like him – to emulate his ways and refine my own character. After all, he has his own place and his own mission, and obviously, I have mine. However, the ability to recognize greatness in another, and to try to implement those qualities into one’s self can be a highly motivating factor for one’s own spiritual growth. Know your place and who you are, but more importantly, know who you want to become, and do whatever it takes to get there. A gutten Shabbos.

Candle Lighting

There are two times on erev Shabbos for candle lighting. The earlier time is Plag HaMincha, one and a quarter seasonal hours before sunset (a seasonal hour is equal to one-twelfth of the total time from sunrise to sunset), and is the earliest time to light candles. The later time is the regular candle lighting time and is 18 minutes before sunset, the latest time to light candles. If one wants to light candles when the shul accepts Shabbos, this is approximately 40 minutes after the start of Mincha.
