Weekly Parsha*Parshas Vayishlach

By Oizer Alport

“For you have striven with the Divine and with man and have overcome” (32:29)

After ferrying his family across a stream, Yaakov returned to the other side to retrieve some small pitchers that he had forgotten. He was confronted by an angel, who wrestled with him throughout the night. After realizing that he could not overcome Yaakov, the angel informed him that because he had successfully wrestled with Hashem and with men, his name would be changed to Yisroel.

Rashi explains that “with men” refers to Yaakov’s triumphs over Lavan and Eisav. As the parsha begins with Yaakov being forced to give a substantial gift to Eisav and to lower himself by bowing to his wicked brother in an attempt to placate his wrath, in what way can this be considered victorious? Wasn’t it Eisav who emerged with his ego intact after Yaakov was forced to flatter and capitulate to him?

Rav Moshe Soloveitchik answers that this question is based on a widespread and fundamental misunderstanding of the definition of “success.” Victory is not defined as subduing and crushing the other side. Rather, it must be viewed in terms of one’s objectives. A person who successfully accomplishes his goals, whatever they may be, is victorious.

Yaakov’s goal was to be able to pursue his service of Hashem and to raise his children to continue in his pious ways without outside distractions or interference. If the only way to accomplish that objective was to give Eisav a considerable number of animals as a present and to humble himself before his arrogant brother, he was quite happy to do so. Yaakov was able to keep his eyes “on the prize,” focusing on the larger picture of his more important spiritual goals. Because he pacified Eisav’s wrath and was able to send him away and return to his service of Hashem, the Torah considers Yaakov victorious.

From the Torah’s definition of success, a similar and critical lesson regarding shalom bayis may be derived. If a person’s goal in marriage is to selfishly make sure that everything is done in accordance with his personal opinions and preferences, any time that his spouse acquiesces he has succeeded in meeting his objectives, and any time that he is forced to give in, he has failed. While this model may be comfortable and familiar, it will not help a person find long-term happiness and satisfaction.

Rather, a person should strive to be mature enough to make his needs secondary to the greater cause and ultimate goal of establishing an atmosphere of love, trust, and mutual respect so that the Shechinah will find a comfortable dwelling place in his home. A person who does so may find himself compromising more than he would have liked, but his ability to do so will allow him to successfully accomplish his true goal. He will reap the immeasurable benefits and security of a warm and loving relationship which is worth more than all of life’s mundane trivialities combined, and he will recognize that doing so makes him the real winner.

Hishtadlus and Tefillah – Partners in Success

Back in Parshas Toldos, Rivkah instructs Yaakov to approach Yitzchak in the guise of Eisav, to usurp his brother’s blessing. Most hesitant to deceive his father, the wary Yaakov responds: “Perhaps my father will feel me and I shall be as a mocker in his eyes; I will thus bring upon myself a curse rather than a blessing” (Bereishis 27:12), to which the Torah answers: “But his mother said to him, ‘Your curse be on me (עלי), my son’ (ibid. 27:13). The word עלי can be rendered as a remez to the three sources of contention, hardship and despair in Yaakov’s life: Esav (ע), Lavan (ל), and Yosef (פ), to teach us that although Rivkah had accepted any curse upon herself, Yaakov’s deception would still have repercussions of its own that would affect him throughout his lifetime. And, indeed they did, as no one can say that Yaakov had an easy life. Even Yaakov himself would agree, as he expressed to Paroah, “The days of the years of my sojourns have been a hundred and thirty years. Few and bad have been the days of the years of my life” (ibid. 47:9).

This week’s parsha begins with Yaakov’s return home to Eretz Canaan, and his imminent confrontation with his brother Eisav. When Yaakov heard that Eisav was approaching with 400 men, the Torah states: “Yaakov became very frightened; and it distressed him” (ibid. 32:8). In the plain sense, Yaakov was apprehensive at the news that Eisav was coming with a sizable army to attack him (Ramban). He was frightened that he would be killed, and distressed that, in defending himself, he might kill others (Rashi). Rashi explains that the “fright” and the “distress” were over two different considerations (Mizrachi). Distress is a stronger emotion than fear. The prospect that he might be forced to kill was more disturbing to Yaakov than the possibility that he might be killed (Ralbag; Artscroll Stone Chumash). Sfias Emes offers a unique interpretation of his own on this verse: “Yaakov realized that someone on his spiritual level should be impervious to fear, yet much to his dismay, he sensed that he had succumbed to that very emotion. ‘Yaakov was afraid, and it distressed him’- he was distressed over the fact that he felt fear.”

One must wonder why exactly Yaakov was “frightened and distressed.” Did he not have faith in Hashem? After all, He had promised him, “Behold, I am with you; I will guard you wherever you go, and I will return you to this soil” (Bereishis 28:15). Rashi explains Yaakov’s lack of faith was not in Hashem, but in himself. He answers, “My merits have been reduced and the truth that You have done me. Therefore, I am afraid lest since the time You promised me, I have become soiled with sin, and it will cause me to be given over into the hand of Eisav” (Rashi on ibid. 32:11). The Midrash suggests two specific transgressions that prompted Yaakov’s doubt: Yaakov said, “All these years Eisav dwelt in Eretz Canaan. Perhaps You will say that he will attack me on the strength of having dwelled in the Land. Furthermore, all these years Eisav remained and honored his parents. Perhaps he will attack me on the strength of having honored his father and mother” (Bereishis Rabbah 76:2). Yaakov feared that in his absence, Eisav excelled in the mitzvos of yishuv Eretz Yisrael and kibbud av v’eim, and therefore was zoche to override Hashem’s promise to protect him.

But instead of panicking, Yaakov devises three different strategies in preparation to confront Eisav. First, hoping to bribe Eisav, Yaakov sends several gifts consisting of droves of livestock and servants. Second, he divides his camp and prepares for battle, if Eisav is not appeased by the gifts. Yaakov’s third, and final preparation, is to daven to Hashem to save him: “G-d of my father Avraham and G-d of my father Yitzchak... Rescue me, please, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Eisav, for I fear him” (Bereishis 32:10-12).

Why did Yaakov save his tefillah for the last stage of preparation? Shouldn’t davening to Hashem in a time of need, especially to save one’s life, be the first and most significant act of preparation? Rabbi Noach Weinberg answers: “Yaakov Avinu’s decision to make prayer his third and final act of preparation teaches us a crucial lesson about the interplay between prayer (tefillah) and taking responsibility (hishtadlus). Prayer is only appropriate once we have undertaken as much responsibility as we possibly can. In the absence of assuming responsibility, we can cloak ourselves in self-righteousness, and use prayer as an escape from our obligations. This is antithetical to what Hashem wants from us.”

Tefillah and true emunah remind us that, ultimately, everything comes from Hashem. But it is not effective until we have first done our hishtadlus, and demonstrated to Him that we are doing everything within our means to resolve the situation on our own. This is what, I believe, the Torah is teaching us by showing how Yaakov did his hishtadlus first, by sending gifts of appeasement and preparing for battle, before he petitioned Hashem with his tefillah. Rav Shlomo Wolbe writes: "Although we must invest whatever effort is necessary in a particular endeavor, we should never lose sight of Who is really in charge. Along with our efforts, we must also pray to Hashem to help us succeed, because hishtadlus and tefillah go hand in hand" (Shiurei Chumash, Vayishlach, introduction 32:9). I had a chavrusa who would say, "You do your best and Hashem does the rest." No matter how righteous a person may be, he should not rely solely on miracles or Divine Assistance; rather, one must first put in his hishtadlus, and then ask the Almighty for His help. I believe that is the lesson we learn here from Yaakov Avinu. A gutten Shabbos.
