Weekly ParshaParshas Vayeishev

By A. Leib Scheinbaum

“If only you would think of me with yourself... and you will do me a kindness, if you please, and mention me to Pharaoh” (40:14)

Chazal tell us that because Yosef placed his trust in the sar ha'mashkim, Chamberlain of Cupbearers, instead of Hashem Himself, he was punished with a two-year extension of his sentence. What did Yosef really do wrong? There is such a thing as hishtadlus, endeavoring. Part of hishtadlus is to ask the chamberlain to intercede on his behalf. This does not diminish his trust in Hashem. The commentators, each in his own way, offer explanations for Yosef's actions and, thereby, teach us lessons in the meaning of faith and trust in Hashem. Horav Nosson Wachtfogel, zl, the venerable Mashgiach of Beth Medrash Govohah, underscores this question by citing the fact that in preparing for his confrontation with Eisav, Yaakov Avinu employed three forms of hishtadlus: doron, he sent a gift; tefillah, he prayed to Hashem; milchamah, he prepared for war. Why then are Yosef's actions discountenanced?

The Mashgiach cites Horav Chaim Vital, zl, who distinguishes between Yaakov's hishtadlus that was carried out together with tefillah and Yosef's hishtadlus that was exclusive of tefillah. While Yosef certainly prayed to Hashem, it was not together with the hishtadlus. Every act of hishtadlus must be accompanied by prayer, supplicating Hashem that this act of hishtadlus be successful. Likewise, when one goes to the doctor, he should entreat Hashem with a kapital of Tehillim, that this visit should be therapeutic. Thus, one realizes that the physician is only a shliach, Hashem's agent. It is Hashem who dispenses the cure. He chooses to deliver it through His various emissaries.

Paroah's Two Chamberlains

The final chapter of our parsha tells the story of two of Paroah's courtiers, the Chamberlain of the Cupbearers and the Chamberlain of the Bakers. “And it happened ... that the cupbearer of the King of Mitzraim and the baker transgressed against their masters, against the king of Mitzraim... Paroah was enraged at... the Chamberlain of the Cupbearers and the Chamberlain of the Bakers” (Bereishis 40:1-2). Rashi identifies the actual sins referred to by the Torah's use of the word “transgressed”: “This one, the cupbearer, a fly was found in his cup of poterion [identified as a spiced drink], and this one, the baker, a pebble was found in his fine bread [the delicate bread he made for Paroah] (Bereishis Rabbah 88:2). The Midrash states that the verse does not mean that they rebelled against the king, for then he would not have jailed them, rather, he would have executed them immediately (ibid.). A closer look at these two verses reveals that, in truth, there were actually four different people mentioned here: the cupbearer and the baker, and the Chamberlain of the Cupbearers and the Chamberlain of the Bakers.

Year after year, as I have read and reviewed this parsha, I never noticed this distinction, and thanks to an absolutely gevaldig chiddush by the Malbim, I have gained a completely new insight and understanding of the entire chapter. The Malbim explains that in the royal courts, certainly in Paroah's time, the king would appoint from among the high ministers of his inner circle a “chamberlain” to serve him directly. But as chamberlains, these men did not busy themselves with the actual preparations; rather, they themselves had trusty servants whom they relied on to carry out these tasks with precision and expertise. However, any blunder or negligence that would displease the king would lead to the punishment of the minister in charge, the chamberlain, since he accepted upon himself responsibility for the actions of his underlings whom he appointed to carry out his duties. Thus, the verse, “... that the cupbearer of the King of Mitzraim and the baker transgressed against their masters, [and] the king of Mitzraim” refers to the workers appointed by the ministers, and not to the ministers themselves. The Torah uses the plural, לאדניהם, “transgressed against their masters,”; i.e., the baker sinned against his master, the Chamberlain of the Bakers, while the cupbearer sinned against his master, the Chamberlain of the Cupbearers, in addition to sinning against Paroah.

The Malbim writes: “Scrutinizing the matter more closely, we find that even though the sin of the baker was much worse than the sin of the cupbearer, this was only insofar as the workers themselves were concerned. However, regarding the ministers, the sin of the Chamberlain of the Cupbearers was far worse than that of the Chamberlain of the Bakers. After all, the Chamberlain of the Bakers did not bake the bread, his servant did! How, then, was he to know that there was a pebble baked inside? He, himself, did nothing wrong, except that he bears the responsibility for the actions of his underling, the baker. On the other hand, as for the Chamberlain of the Cupbearers, he himself sinned, for he should have looked in the cup before handing it to the king.”

With this understanding, it seems that Yosef's interpretation of each man's dream was contradictory to true justice. Logic would dictate that Yosef would have reversed the interpretations, so that the Chamberlain of the Bakers, who was truly innocent of any wrongdoing, would be the one restored to his position, whereas the Chamberlain of the Cupbearers, who was certainly negligent, would be the one to be executed by Paroah. Indeed, Yosef interpreted the dreams correctly, as the verse states: “The Chamberlain of the Bakers saw that he had interpreted well [with regard to Yosef's interpretation of the dream of the Chamberlain of the Cupbearers]” (Bereishis 40:16). Rashi states, “Each one dreamt the dream of both of them, for [each one] dreamt his own dream, and the interpretation of his friend's dream.”

The answer, says the Malbim, is that the Torah is teaching us a very important lesson, showing us just how extraordinary was the special Divine Providence that Hashem provided Yosef in catapulting him to power. If Yosef had interpreted the dreams according to each man's culpability, then it would be said that Yosef's interpretation was merely an educated guess, based on the logical calculation that each got what he deserved according to his sin. Thus, states the Malbim, when they saw that Yosef interpreted their dreams contrary to logic and simple justice, and that his interpretation of each dream was actually carried out by Paroah, then it became clear that Yosef was indeed infused with the Divine spirit. It was this ability to interpret dreams correctly which the Chamberlain of the Cupbearers related to Paroah a year later, prompting the king to grant Yosef his freedom. Paroah was so impressed with Yosef's interpretation of his dreams that he appointed him viceroy over the entire land of Mitzraim, thus setting into motion the fulfillment of Hashem's promise to Avraham, which was Divinely orchestrated from the moment that Yosef was sold into slavery by his brothers. We now see how Paroah's two chamberlains were just one link in the long chain of events that led to Yosef's rise to power and the fulfillment of the destiny of the Jewish people. A gutten Shabbos.
