Weekly Parsha*Parshas Shemos

By Rabbi A. Leib Scheinbaum

“The king of Egypt said to the Hebrew midwives... the name of the first was Shifrah, and the name of the second was Puah” (1:15)

Rashi cites Chazal who say that Shifrah and Puah were none other than Yocheved and Miriam, Moshe Rabbeinu’s mother and sister, respectively. Shifrah was given this name because she was meshaper, had beautified the newly-born infant. Puah, Miriam, was given her name, because she was poeh, had spoken soothingly, calming down the infant. We note that up until this point Yocheved and Miriam had not been mentioned by their real names. The only names by which we know them are names describing their interaction with the infant. One would think that such elementary and natural activity, something which is commonplace among women, would not draw attention to the extent that it be worthy of acknowledging with a name

Horav Yerucham Levovitz, zl, the venerable Mashgiach of pre-World War II Mir, explains that names are important, playing a critical role in describing a person’s essence. Therefore, when the Torah refers to Yocheved and Miriam as Shifrah and Puah, it is indicating that these names characterize them. A simple, everyday activity has the power to convey the essence of a person. This teaches us that in This World there are no minor actions or major actions. It is all based on the individual who carries out the activity. A great person lives and acts with greatness. Every activity is an indication of his distinctiveness. A small person, on the other hand, can take the most distinguished activity and trivialize it, thereby distorting its significance. A great person earns a place in the Torah for the manner that she communicates with an infant. It becomes her benchmark, her signature.

We derive from here that the man defines the activity, rather than the action defining the man. Horav Chaim Kamil, zl, would cite from Horav Chaim Shmuelevitz, zl, that those who eulogize great Torah leaders by relating their everyday activities as stories and episodes in their lives err greatly. These incidents are not just merely episodes; they were defining moments, which characterize the preeminence of these individuals. He cited the interaction in the Talmud (Moed Katan 28a) that occurred between Rabbi Chiya and the Angel of Death.

The Angel of Death could not find a means of gaining access to Rabbi Chiya. One day, the Angel of Death appeared at Rabbi Chiya’s door as a poor man asking for a slice of bread. Rabbi Chiya gladly gave him some bread. The Angel then asked, “The master has compassion on a poor man. Why does he not have similar compassion on ‘that man standing outside the door’? At that moment the door was opened and the Angel of Death displayed his fiery rod, thereby revealing his true identity, so that he was able to carry out his mission of taking Rabbi Chiya’s life.”

This story is mind-boggling. What similarity is there between giving a poor man a piece of bread and giving up his life to the Angel of Death? Evidently, when Rabbi Chiya gave a slice of bread to a poor man, it was more than a simple, kind gesture. He was giving a part of his life to the man. This is the level of sensitivity he manifest upon giving charity. Rav Chaim would add that to portray Rabbi Chiya as a man who was openhearted and gladly gave bread to the poor would be a grave error. He did not just give bread; he gave his life!

We now understand the profundity of Rav Yeruchem’s statement: The individual defines the action. Rabbi Chiya transformed the act of sharing a slice of bread with a poor man into a lofty gesture. He gave with his heart and soul, tantamount to giving up his life. Likewise, one woman can “pooh pooh” an infant, and the act has little or no meaning, while another woman can do the exact same act; but it is an act of spiritual ascendancy that defines her character.

The Birth of Moshe

The Midrash (Yalkut Shimoni) states that following Paroah’s command to kill the baby Jewish boys, and Shifra and Puah’s subsequent refusal to do so (Shemos 1:15-21), Paroah had a terrifying dream that haunted him: As he sat on his throne, an old man appeared before Paroah, holding a large scale before the king. He reached out with one hand, grasped all the nobles and princes of the Egyptian court, bound them, and placed them on one side of the scale. Then he brought a little white lamb and placed it on the other side of the scale, and behold - the scale continued dropping until the lamb had pulled them all down. Paroah awoke in a cold sweat, and summoned his astrologers. After much deliberation, they explained the meaning of the dream to Paroah: A redeemer of the Jewish people was about to be born in Mitzraim. Since Moshe was born from a Jewish mother, but raised by an Egyptian woman [Paroah’s own daughter, Basya], their vision was obscured, and they warned Paroah that the baby could be either Jewish or Egyptian (Shemos Rabbah 1:32). Paroah declared, “If there is a possibility that the redeemer might be an Egyptian, we must include all newborn Egyptian boys in the decree of annihilation for the coming nine months.” Although the outraged Egyptians protested Paroah’s decree, he did not falter, and ordered his soldiers to cast every baby boy born in Mitzraim into the Nile (ibid. 1:33).

According to the Sages (Sotah 12a), when Paroah made this decree, rather than bring into the world babies already sentenced to death, Amram divorced his wife Yocheved. Seeing how all the Jewish men followed her father’s example, Miriam said to Amram, “Your decree is more severe than that of Paroah. If Paroah decreed only against the newborn males, should you have decreed against the females as well?” (Rashi). Hearing his daughter’s words, Amram promptly remarried his wife, and all the Jewish men followed suit (Sotah 12a). Thus, it is written: “A man... from the house of Levi [Amram]... took [in marriage] a daughter of Levi [Yocheved]. The woman conceived and gave birth to a son. She saw that he was good and... hid him for three months. She could not hide him any longer, so she took for him a... basket and smeared it with clay and pitch; she placed the boy into it and placed it among the reeds at the bank of the River [Nile]” (Shemos 2:1-3).

The Malbim states: Even after the Mitzrim found out that the Jewish men and women had remarried, they refrained from searching for babies for a full nine months, knowing that the men and women had undergone an extended period of complete separation. Yet, by Divine Providence, Yocheved conceived immediately and gave birth after only six months – and thus, she was able to conceal the birth for a short time. Therefore, “she hid him for three months” until the Mitzrim began searching again. Despite the fact that Moshe was born prematurely, “she saw that he was good,” that he was healthy and as well formed as a baby born at full term. Yocheved saw that he was of exceptionally perfect form and appearance, and she perceived that he possessed an exalted spiritual essence, as the Midrash (Shemos Rabbah 1:20) states: “He was born circumcised and the entire house filled with light upon his birth” (Sotah 12a). However, three months later [nine months from the time that the Jewish couples reunited], the Mitzrim resumed their search, and “she could not hide him any longer, so she took for him a wicker basket... [and] placed the boy into it... among the reeds at the bank of the River.” According to Mizrachi, the fact that the entire house filled with light was a sign to Yocheved that her son would be the subject of special “Divine protection.” Relying on this protection, she later placed Moshe in the basket “among the reeds at the bank of the River" (Rashi). We see in next week's parsha that it is Aharon, not Moshe, who is commanded to bring the first two makkos [the blood and the frogs] against the Nile (Shemos 7:19, 8:1). Rashi adds that since the River had protected baby Moshe when he was placed in the basket among the reeds, it would have been improper for him to be the instrument to inflict a plague upon it.

The Sages (Megillah 13b) teach that Moshe was born on the seventh day of Adar. Considering that Yocheved then hid him for three months before she placed him inside the basket, we can calculate that the date he was placed "among the reeds at the bank of the River" was the seventh day of Sivan. This was the day that Moshe himself, eighty years later, was destined to ascend Har Sinai for Mattan Torah. [According to a dissenting view in the Talmud (Shabbos 86b), Mattan Torah occurred one day earlier, on the sixth of Sivan. Either way, it would have occurred three months after Moshe's eightieth birthday]. The symbolism on this day of Moshe in the reed basket allegorically depicts Moshe's general essence and his worthiness to be the one to receive the Torah (Malbim). And so it was that through the Divine protection, baby Moshe was rescued by bas Paroah, and raised in the very palace of the king from whom the redemption of the Jewish people would come some eighty years later. A gutten Shabbos.
