Backyard Minyanim

Rabbi Goldberger strongly encourages the entire Kehilla to look at the most recent Vaad HaRabbonim guidelines regarding community wide backyard minyanim which can be found on Baltimore Jewish Life. These are some of the guidelines for this phase:

- No minyanim can take place indoors. Even if there is inclement weather, the minyan cannot go indoors.
- A backyard minyan can have a maximum of 12 or 13 people.
- Everyone must wear a mask and practice social distancing. Bring your own mask and put it on before arrival and take it off after you leave, and your own siddur and chair.
- Each minyan must have a gabbai who makes sure all the rules are being followed and who registers the minyan at Register Minyan.
- Attendees must walk to the minyan so as not to create traffic problems.
- No congregating before or after minyan.
- Anyone who is ill or who has been exposed to someone with Covid 19 cannot attend the minyan.

This Shabbos

All Shabbos davening is at home. Remember, you can say everything except: Kaddish. Barchu. Repetition of Shemoneh Esrei and Kedusha. Krias HaTorah. On Friday night you can say "Va'Yechulu" after Shemoneh Esrei even if you are by yourself. Do not say the bracha Magen Avos which follows all the way through "Baruch Ata Hashem, Mekadesh HaShabbos." The rabbi suggests you read Parshas Bamidbar, along with the Haftarah (Machar Chodesh), from the Chumash. No brachos should be made on the Torah or the Haftarah. A gutten Shabbos.

Shavuos Learning Packet

Please look in your shul emails this week for a beautiful selection of learning passages compiled by Rabbi Elie Levi for Shavuos. Something for everyone! You can print them out and have a lot of exciting study materials and texts for Shavuos night and Yom Tov. Thank you, Rabbi Levi, for the time and effort you put into this.

Got a Grad?

Is there a graduate in your household? We'd love to share in your nachas by posting the names of the graduates in the Lev Echad. Please send their names and their schools to levechad@tiferesyisroel.org for a mazel tov.

Mazel Tov to

- Mazel tov to Dr. Stuart and Debbie Goldman on the bris of their grandson, Shmuel, son of Nechama and Noach Bergman. May they be zoche l'gadlo l'Torah l'chuppah ul'maasim tovim.
- Mazel tov to Eliezer and Devorah Sherman on the birth of a granddaughter born to Sara and Yosef Pollack in Brooklyn. May they be zoche l'gadla l'Torah l'chuppah ul'maasim tovim.

Weekly Parsha*Parshas Bamidbar

By Rabbi Oizer Alport

“Take a census of the entire assembly of the Children of Israel” (1:2)

There is a mystical idea that the content of the parsha read each Shabbos is connected to the events of the upcoming week. It is interesting to note that Parshas Bamidbar is usually read on the Shabbos preceding Shavuos. What possible connection could there be between a parsha which deals primarily with counting the tribes and the festival on which the Jewish nation received the Torah?

Rav Moshe Feinstein explains that as Jews around the world excitedly gear up to personally reaccept the Torah and reaffirm their commitments to its study, the evil inclination attempts to derail them. It argues that their Torah study is so limited in quantity and quality that it is insignificant and even, chas v'shalom, a waste of time. The yetzer hara shows a person that his more intellectually-gifted friends are able to learn more hours and more pages and to retain their knowledge better than he could ever hope to do. As Jews get excited for the universal custom of staying up all night on Shavuos engrossed in Torah study, a person may be tempted to opt for a good night's sleep after realizing that the most he could accomplish in an entire night could be learned on an even higher level by the Rav in a mere 10 minutes.

To counter this flawed argument, the Torah precedes the holiday of Shavuos with the reading of Parshas Bamidbar. The parsha begins with Hashem's command to conduct a census of the Jewish people, but it is written using a peculiar expression. Instead of instructing Moshe to “go count the people,” the words used translate literally as “pick up the heads of the Jews.” Why did Hashem use this awkward expression when commanding Moshe about the census?

Rav Moshe explains that just as a contemporary Jew could get discouraged in his service of Hashem when comparing it to others, certainly one in the wilderness, who lived in the shadows of Moshe and Aharon, could be susceptible to the same fallacy. He may feel that although he is “worth” 1, those around him are “worth” 100, leaving him despondent. Hashem used this peculiar expression because when every Jew realizes that in the census he is counted as the same 1 as every other Jew, he will recognize how valuable his efforts are in Hashem's eyes. This understanding will allow him to “pick up his head” and hold it high with a newfound self-confidence.

Although others may seem light-years ahead of us in the quantity and quality of their mitzvos, the lesson of Parshas Bamidbar is that everybody is judged separately in Hashem's eyes, based on a personalized benchmark of what he is capable of doing. A person who overcomes his own struggles to maximize his individual potential should certainly enter Shavuos prepared to accept the Torah with his head held high.

The Deeds of the Righteous

It's hard to believe that we have been in a state of “quarantine” for the entire period of Sefiras HaOmer, and next erev Shabbos and Shabbos, we will celebrate the festival of Shavuos (B'H, we will be back in shul for davening!). Although there are no halachos pertaining to Shavuos, we do have the minhag of reading Megillas Rus (and eating cheesecake). I've often wondered about the connection between Shavuos and Megillas Rus, and why it has become part of our mesorah? In the sefer The Three Festivals: Ideas and Insights of the Sfas Emes, the author writes in his introduction to Megillas Rus: “The custom of reading the Book of Rus – the moving story of a Moabite woman's odyssey to Judaism – on Shavuos is first mentioned in Mesechtas Sofrim, a source dating back to the era of the Gaonim; the Shulchan Aruch briefly mentions this custom in Orach Chaim 490:9. Numerous reasons have been offered for this practice. Mishnah Berurah (ad loc.) suggests that Rus reminds the would-be Torah scholar that achieving greatness in Torah learning is not a simple matter; Torah can be acquired only through constant struggle to overcome challenges.”

He describes various approaches to explain why Rus was selected as the appropriate Megilla to be read on Shavuos. One suggestion is that the Book of Rus demonstrates the power of Torah scholars, such as Boaz, to set halachic standards through their actions. In addition, Rus illustrates the interconnection between Torah study and practical actions (such as acts of chesed), and shows how converts can join the ranks of the Jewish people and make significant contributions to its legacy. Since Rus was the founder of the Davidic dynasty and the root of the Moshiach, reading her story also exemplifies our indomitable belief that the arrival of Moshiach will usher in a glorious era to rival the splendor of Matan Torah. “Megillas Rus is not merely a book to be read on Shavuos, but serves as an essential supplement to the Torah.”

Rabbi Shimon ben Gamliel says “... It is not the theory (study of Torah) that is of primary importance, but the action (practice of Torah)” (Avos 1:17). Rashi agrees with this Mishnah and states that one who performs mitzvos is greater than one who studies Torah but does not translate it into action. The Sfas Emes suggests a correlation between this Mishnah and Megillas Rus, and writes: “We must learn from the deeds of tzaddikim, often performed of their own initiative without halachic precedent, as well as their reactions to situations not explicitly mentioned in the Torah. The true role models of Torah do not just practice Judaism, they personify it. Their every action is guided by Torah principles, and is worthy of study as much as actual Torah commandments. In fact, the practices of tzaddikim are deemed to be a living supplement to the Torah. The conduct of Boaz, as depicted in Megillas Rus, is a classic example of the personification of Torah through the actions of tzaddikim. The very name ‘Boaz’ can be seen as an amalgam of the words בו and עז, meaning ‘strength is within him.’ Boaz was a man of innate strength and courage, someone well equipped to focus the searchlight of Torah on situations not previously clarified.”

The Sfas Emes continues: “Boaz agreed to marry Rus despite his relative's (Ploni Almoni) unfounded contention that marriage with a Moabite woman was forbidden by Jewish law. Boaz was content to rely on the Biblical interpretation and collective wisdom of the Sages of his generation, who ruled that the prohibition against marrying Moabites applied only to males from that nation (Yevamos 77). By marrying Rus, Boaz affirmed emunas chachamim, faith in the rulings of contemporary Torah scholars. Boaz intuitively anticipated the ruling of the Sanhedrin because his own identification with Torah law was complete. This is one reason we read Megillas Rus on Shavuos, to demonstrate the power of the authorities of a generation to both interpret and, in some instances, anticipate rulings involving halacha through their personal conduct.”

This, explains the Sfas Emes, is the essence of the Oral Law: “The ability of the leaders of each generation to implement ever-new aspects of Torah orally, in accordance with the established principles of Torah interpretation. While the Written Law is unquestionably the pure emes, as a nation we can arrive at that truth only through emunas chachamim, faith in the Torah that the authorities of our generation affect constantly.” Indeed, this controversial halacha led to a major dispute over the legitimacy of Dovid HaMelech's reign, which led to controversy and scathing abuse because of his descent from Rus the Moabite. The Talmud (Yevamos) states that in the time of Shaul HaMelech, Doeg the Edomite, head of the Sanhedrin, tried to disqualify Dovid from the kingship by proclaiming him unfit. The Me'am Lo'ez writes: "Doeg's challenge touched off a heated controversy. The Talmud (ibid. 77a) records that Amasa ben Yitra drew his sword and declared, 'He who does not accept this halacha will be pierced by the sword. This is the tradition I received from the court of Shmuel: A Moabite [is forbidden], not a Moabites.' A query was then dispatched to Shmuel HaNavi, who confirmed Amasa's statement: that aspect of the law was an oral tradition faithfully transmitted from Moshe. Thereupon, the prophet composed Megillas Rus as a halachic ruling to validate Dovid's right to kingship."

The Me'am Lo'ez adds that Megillas Rus also reminds us of the obligation of giving to the poor from the harvest, in accordance with the laws of peah, leket, and shikechah (Vayikra 19:9-10). He writes: "Charity is particularly necessary and advisable at the completion of the Omer count, a time of din, for it then protects the giver from the Attribute of Strict Justice. Through charity and Torah study [and as we learn from above, Torah observance], Israel will merit the speedy coming of Rus' descendant, the Moshiach." A gutten Shabbos.

From this Week's Daf

"Concerning the definition of magoshta, Rav and Shmuel disagree: One said that it is a sorcerer, and one said that it means a blasphemer. The Gemara deduces what Rav holds: It can be concluded that Rav is the one who said that magoshta means a blasphemer, for Rav Zutra bar Toviyah said in the name of Rav: One who learns one thing from a magosh is liable to death. In this statement by Rav, the term magosh must mean a heretic, for if you think that it means a sorcerer – why it is written: You shall not learn to do [acts of sorcery]. Now, this implies that you may not acquire this knowledge in order to commit acts of sorcery, but you may learn sorcery in order to understand and rule on such matters. Hence, Rav could not state categorically that one who learns something from a sorcerer is liable to death. It can be concluded, then, that it is Rav who said that magoshta means a blasphemer" (Shabbos 75a).
