Shul Purim Card

Purim is coming- reserve your space! Here is a great opportunity to send Purim greetings to all the shul members. A beautiful Purim card will be sent to everyone in the shul with your name listed as part of the signature. The cost for this incredible bargain is only $36, and, the card will be designed by the children in the shul. To add your name to the card, send in your reservation on the shul website at: Purim Card Reservation. Deadline for end of the day, February 17.

Purim at TY

In order to allow for our kehillah to hear the Megillah in shul with proper social distancing, there will be several readings on Purim night and on Purim day. Registration will be required, so please look for a shul email. There will be simultaneous Megillah readings in the Main Shul and in the Simcha Hall. Children ages 9 and over will be allowed to come, and must sit next to a parent throughout. Everyone must wear a mask. Please send in your matanos l'evyonim to the shul website (and mark it as such), or deliver a check to Rabbi Goldberger made out to TY RDF with Purim in the memo. Stay tuned for more information.

The Weekly Parsha

Parshas Mishpatim

By Rabbi A. Leib Scheinbaum

“And these are the ordinances that you shall place before them” (21:1)

Parshas Mishpatim addresses civil and tort law. Interestingly, it follows closely after the Aseres HaDibros, the Ten Commandments. Surely, there must be a message in this juxtaposition. Simply, Hashem is telling us that religion applies to all areas of life. Parshas Mishpatim and the Ten Commandments were both delivered at Har Sinai, prior to the forty-day period during which Moshe Rabbeinu received the entire Torah. Clearly, we see that the laws involving one's relationship with his fellow man are no different than the Ten Commandments. Thus, during the same session in which Hashem taught Moshe the most fundamental mitzvos, such as the unity of G-d, he also taught him the laws of damages incurred by one's cow. How are we to understand this?

Horav Moshe Feinstein derives from here that one who feels he is above the mishpatim, ordinances, that regulate civil and tort law, is indicating that he has a similar attitude concerning his belief in Hashem. The two beliefs accompany one another. One who believes in Hashem believes that his annual livelihood is decided on Rosh Hashanah. If he resorts to cheating and other forms of irreputable behavior in business, he demonstrates that he does not believe that Hashem provides for him. One who internalizes the idea that Hashem provides whatever he needs does not have to resort to behavior that is unbecoming a Jew. To distinguish between mitzvos is to deny their Source.

Divine Justice

In this week's parsha, Moshe teaches the people the “mishpatim,” the civil laws between man and his fellow: “And these (ואלה) are the “mishpatim” that you shall place before them” (Shemos 21:1). Rashi states, “Whenever it says ואלה, and these, in the Torah, it adds on to that which has been stated previously. Thus, ואלה of this verse implies, just as the Ten Commandments [which have been stated previously] are LeMoshe MiSinai, so, too, these commandments that the Torah is about to state are LeMoshe MiSinai.” Thus, Rashi suggests that Mishpatim is a continuation of Yisro; Moshe received the complete Torah at Har Sinai in last week's parsha, and is now relating the intricacies of civil law to the Jewish people in our parsha.

Parshas Mishpatim teaches us that piety is found not only in our religious rituals and observance, but also in our adherence to the daily laws that govern our lives, both in business and social arenas. The Artscroll Stone Chumash explains, “Although Western man differentiates between Church and State, the Torah knows no such distinction.” The Ramban remarks that the civil laws found in our parsha are merely an extension of the Tenth Commandment, the prohibition against coveting. The Sforno agrees, and adds that the commandment warns one against coveting anything that belongs to his fellow. In our parsha, the Torah now defines what exactly belongs to others, and the halachic ramifications for any violations or damages to another's property. All of the laws of this parsha are part of Hashem's “mishpatim,” and fall under the rubric of Divine Justice.

HaRav Moshe Feinstein writes: “These particular laws were given immediately following the Ten Commandments, unlike the other mitzvos, which, though given at Har Sinai, were presented later. This is in accordance with the opinion of the Ramban, who comments (24:1) that Parshas Mishpatim was written in the sequence that the events actually occurred. In his view, Moshe came down from the mountain the first time to relay to Israel the Ten Commandments and the ordinances of this parsha, and then ascended a second time to receive the rest of the Torah. Why did Hashem give Moshe the Torah's monetary laws together with the Ten Commandments, which are the most fundamental of all the mitzvos? He did this in order to teach us that someone who does not observe these ordinances, in effect, denies Hashem's existence by acting as if all his possessions are the product of his own strength and efforts. If one believes that everything he has comes from Hashem and that only Hashem gives us all our wants in accordance with what He has decreed each year on Rosh Hashana, he will be meticulous not to transgress any of the Torah's monetary laws.”

Several years ago, I read an amazing mashal for Parshas Mishpatim that is a simple, yet powerful, explanation of Hashem's Divine Justice: After the Revelation at Har Sinai, Moshe Rabbeinu wanted to better understand the laws of the Torah, so he asked Hashem to show him His Ways of Divine Justice. Hashem agreed and led Moshe to a hill overlooking a well, and instructed him to ascend to the top and look down. Gazing down from above, Moshe saw a man approach the well, and as he reached down to draw his water, his wallet fell out of his pocket and landed on the ground. Unaware, the man finished and walked away, leaving the wallet behind. A few moments later a second man came to the well, and when he reached down to draw his water, he noticed the wallet lying on the ground. He swiftly picked it up, put it in his pocket and quickly ran off. Moments later a third man approached the well, and as he was about to draw his water, the first man returned to retrieve his lost wallet. He asked the third man if he had seen the wallet, to which he truthfully replied that he had not. The two men began to argue, and the first man accused the third man of being a liar and a thief. Before long, a scuffle broke out, and in a fit of rage, the first man beat the third man to death and quickly fled the scene.

A bewildered Moshe Rabbeinu looked up and said, “Master of the Universe, please help me understand! I just witnessed a thief run off with a stolen wallet and then an innocent man was beaten to death – how is this justice?” Hashem responded to Moshe and explained, “The first man that you saw was the thief. From whom did he steal? He stole the wallet of the second man. The third man that you saw was a murderer. Whom did he kill? He murdered the father of the first man.” This is Divine Justice. The second man retrieved what was rightfully his, the third man was punished by death for his crime, and the first man inadvertently returned the stolen wallet to its proper owner, and unbeknownst to him, was able to avenge his father's death.

It is clear that these mishpatim, just like the Ten Commandments, are of a Divine nature. Although we possess a limited human ability to comprehend them, we must nonetheless follow them, regardless of our true understanding. Reb Moshe concludes: “We can say that the ordinances were given immediately after the Ten Commandments, before all the other sections of the Torah, in order to stress their central importance as an expression of our faith in Hashem's control of every detail of our lives, including every penny of our income and expenses.” A gutten Shabbos.

New Protocols for Women for Shabbos Registration

Unfortunately, due to the limited number of seats in the ezras nashim, there is often an overflow of women in shul, beyond the number we can properly and safely accommodate with our COVID social distancing protocol. Therefore, we have established a new protocol:

- Anyone who registers for Shabbos davening on any one week, must wait until Friday morning of the following week to see if there are any remaining open seats before registering for the next Shabbos. This cycle should allow for every woman who wants to attend to be able to come to shul at least every other Shabbos.

- Non-members must always wait until Friday morning to register, to ensure that shul members have the first opportunity to sign up.
- There are 11 total slots on the spreadsheet for women to sign up, corresponding to the 11 seating areas in the ezras nashim. Of those 11 seating areas, two can accommodate two women who live in the same house sitting together, and one can accommodate up to three women who live in the same house sitting together. Those areas have all been set up with extra folding chairs for group seating, when needed.
- Accordingly, if you are signing up for multiple family members, and see that there are already three slots on the spreadsheet with multiple names, you may no longer enter multiple names in the same slot to sit together in shul. Rather, at that point, family members will have to sign up for separate slots and sit in seating areas with social distancing.

From this Week's Daf

"If [the members of the community] were divided into three groups, with one-third of them zavim, one-third of them tahor, and one-third of them tamei through corpses, R' Mani bar Patish said: Those who were tamei through corpses do not make either the first Pesach offering or the second one. On the First Pesach, they do not make the offering, because the zavim are added to the tahor people, who do not make the offering in tumah, with the result that those who are tamei through corpses are the minority; and a minority does not make the offering in tumah on the First Pesach. On the Second Pesach they do not make it, because the zavim combine with those who were tamei through corpses, who did not make the offering on the First Pesach, with the result that [those who did not yet make the offering] are the majority of the community; and a majority is not deferred to Pesach Sheni'." (Pesachim 80b)
