The Weekly Parsha

Parshas Bamidbar/Shavuos

By Rabbi Oizer Alport

“Take a census of the entire assembly of the Children of Israel” (1:2)

There is a mystical idea that the content of the parsha read each Shabbos is connected to the events of the upcoming week. It is interesting to note that Parshas Bamidbar is usually read on the Shabbos preceding Shavuos. What possible connection could there be between a parsha which deals primarily with counting the tribes and the festival on which the Jewish nation received the Torah?

Rav Moshe Feinstein explains that as Jews around the world excitedly gear up to personally reaccept the Torah and reaffirm their commitments to its study, the evil inclination attempts to derail them. It argues that their Torah study is so limited in quantity and quality that it is insignificant and even, chas v'shalom, a waste of time. The yetzer hara shows a person that his more intellectually gifted friends are able to learn more hours and more pages and to retain their knowledge better than he could ever hope to do. As Jews get excited for the universal custom of staying up all night on Shavuos engrossed in Torah study, a person may be tempted to opt for a good night's sleep after realizing that the most he could accomplish in an entire night could be learned on an even higher level by the Rav in a mere 10 minutes.

To counter this flawed argument, the Torah precedes the holiday of Shavuos with the reading of Parshas Bamidbar. The parsha begins with Hashem's command to conduct a census of the Jewish people, but it is written using a peculiar expression. Instead of instructing Moshe to “go count the people,” the words used translate literally as “pick up the heads of the Jews.” Why did Hashem use this awkward expression when commanding Moshe about the census?

Rav Moshe explains that just as a contemporary Jew could get discouraged in his service of Hashem when comparing it to others, certainly one in the wilderness, who lived in the shadows of Moshe and Aharon, could be susceptible to the same fallacy. He may feel that although he is “worth” 1, those around him are “worth” 100, leaving him despondent. Hashem used this peculiar expression because when every Jew realizes that in the census he is counted as the same 1 as every other Jew, he will recognize how valuable his efforts are in Hashem's eyes. This understanding will allow him to “pick up his head” and hold it high with a newfound self-confidence.

Although others may seem light-years ahead of us in the quantity and quality of their mitzvos, the lesson of Parshas Bamidbar is that everybody is judged separately in Hashem's eyes, based on a personalized benchmark of what he is capable of doing. A person who overcomes his own struggles to maximize his individual potential should certainly enter Shavuos prepared to accept the Torah with his head held high.

The Deeds of the Righteous

It's hard to believe that this motzei Shabbos we conclude our Sefirah count and begin to celebrate the festival of Shavuos. Although there are no halachos pertaining to Shavuos, we do have the minhag of reading Megillas Rus [and, of course, eating cheesecake]. I have often wondered about the connection between Shavuos and Megillas Rus, and why it has become part of our mesorah? In the sefer The Three Festivals: Ideas and Insights of the Sfias Emes, the author writes in his introduction to Megillas Rus: “The custom of reading the Book of Rus – the moving story of a Moabite woman's odyssey to Judaism – on Shavuos is first mentioned in Mesechtas Sofrim, a source dating back to the era of the Gaonim; the Shulchan Aruch briefly mentions this custom in Orach Chaim 490:9. Numerous reasons have been offered for this practice. Mishnah Berurah (ad loc.) suggests that Rus reminds the would-be Torah scholar that achieving greatness in Torah learning is not a simple matter; Torah can be acquired only through constant struggle to overcome challenges.”

He describes various approaches to explain why Rus was selected as the appropriate Megilla to be read on Shavuos. One suggestion is that the Book of Rus demonstrates the power of Torah scholars, such as Boaz, to set halachic standards through their actions. In addition, Rus illustrates the interconnection between Torah study and practical actions (such as acts of chesed), and shows how converts can join the ranks of the Jewish people and make significant contributions to its legacy. Since Rus was the founder of the Dovidic dynasty and the root of the Mashiach, reading her story also exemplifies our indomitable belief that the arrival of Mashiach will usher in a glorious era to rival the splendor of Matan Torah. “Megillas Rus is not merely a book to be read on Shavuos, but serves as an essential supplement to the Torah.”

Rabbi Shimon ben Gamliel says “... It is not the theory [study of Torah] that is of primary importance, but the action [practice of Torah]” (Avos 1:17). Rashi agrees with this Mishnah and states that one who performs mitzvos is greater than one who studies Torah, but does not translate it into action. The Sfias Emes suggests a correlation between this Mishnah and Megillas Rus, and writes: “We must learn from the deeds of tzaddikim, often performed of their own initiative without halachic precedent, as well as their reactions to situations not explicitly mentioned in the Torah. The true role models of Torah do not just practice Judaism, they personify it. Their every action is guided by Torah principles, and is worthy of study as much as actual Torah commandments. In fact, the practices of tzaddikim are deemed to be a living supplement to the Torah. The conduct of Boaz, as depicted in Megillas Rus, is a classic example of the personification of Torah through the actions of tzaddikim. The very name ‘Boaz’ can be seen as an amalgam of the words בּוּז and לוּ, meaning ‘strength is within him.’ Boaz was a man of innate strength and courage, someone well equipped to focus the searchlight of Torah on situations not previously clarified.”

The Sfias Emes continues: “Boaz agreed to marry Rus despite his relative's [Ploni Almoni] unfounded contention that marriage with a Moabite woman was forbidden by Jewish law. Boaz was content to rely on the Biblical interpretation and collective wisdom of the Sages of his generation, who ruled that the prohibition against marrying Moabites applied only to males from that nation (Yevamos 77). By marrying Rus, Boaz affirmed emunas chachamim, faith in the rulings of contemporary Torah scholars. Boaz intuitively anticipated the ruling of the Sanhedrin because his own identification with Torah law was complete. This is one reason we read Megillas Rus on Shavuos, to demonstrate the power of the authorities of a generation to both interpret and, in some instances, anticipate rulings involving halacha through their personal conduct.”

This, explains the Sfias Emes, is the essence of the Oral Law: “The ability of the leaders of each generation to implement ever-new aspects of Torah orally, in accordance with the established principles of Torah interpretation. While the Written Law is unquestionably the pure emes, as a nation we can arrive at that truth only through emunas chachamim, faith in the Torah that the authorities of our generation affect constantly.”

Indeed, this controversial halacha led to a major dispute over the legitimacy of Dovid HaMelech's reign, which led to controversy and scathing abuse because of his descent from Rus the Moabite. The Talmud (Yevamos 76b) states that in the time of Shaul HaMelech, Doeg the Edomite, head of the Sanhedrin, tried to disqualify Dovid from the kingship by proclaiming him unfit. The Me'am Lo'ez writes: "Doeg's challenge touched off a heated controversy. The Talmud (ibid. 77a) records that Amasa ben Yitra 'girded his sword like Yishmael' and declared, 'He who does not accept this halacha will be pierced by the sword. This is the tradition I received from the court of Shmuel: A Moabite [is forbidden], not a Moabitess.' A query was then dispatched to Shmuel HaNavi, who confirmed Amasa's statement: that aspect of the law was an oral tradition faithfully transmitted from Moshe. Thereupon, the prophet composed Megillas Rus as a halachic ruling to validate Dovid's right to kingship."

The Me'am Lo'ez adds that Megillas Rus also reminds us of the obligation of giving to the poor from the harvest, in accordance with the laws of peah, leket, and shikechah (Vayikra 19:9-10). He writes: "Charity is particularly necessary and advisable at the completion of the Omer count, a time of din, for it then protects the giver from the Attribute of Strict Justice. Through charity and Torah study [and as we learn from above, Torah observance], Israel will merit the speedy coming of Rus' descendant, the Mashiah." May we be zoche to witness the return of the Dovidic dynasty and the coming of the holy progeny of Rus and Boaz. A gutten Shabbos and Yom Tov.

From This Week's Daf

"Rebbi said: From where do we know about the five immersions and ten sanctifications that the Kohein Gadol performs on the day of Yom Kippur?... And there are five distinct services on Yom Kippur: The morning tamid, which the Kohein Gadol offers in gold vestments; the special service of the day performed in white vestments; [the Kohein Gadol's] ram and the ram of the people, which he offers in gold vestments; the removal of the ladle and coal-pan from the Holy of Holies, performed in white vestments; and the afternoon tamid, which he offers in gold vestments. And from where do we know that each and every immersion requires two sanctifications? The Torah states: He shall remove... he shall wash, he shall wash... he shall don." (Yoma 32b)
