The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,

The Beth Israel Bulletin

A Publication of Beth Israel Synagogue

April 2018 ~ Nissan/Iyar 5778

Rabbi Ari Dembitzer, Rabbi

We are freed on Pesach and we receive our eternal responsibility on Shavuot. To go from freedom to responsibility requires self-work. During the time period of "sefirat haomer," we transform our bodies to be vessels of spirit. We work on our traits, one at a time, to be the best we can be. At Beth Israel, we are not happy with yesterday. We want to become better, and be more than yesterday. We learn, connect and pray to ready ourselves for our mission as a nation, and as a shul.

May we be the best shul we can be,
Rabbi Ari

Rabbi Shlomo Abramovich, Visiting Scholar

At Passover, we stop asking for rain in our daily prayers. In Sephardic siddurs there is instead a special additional prayer for the dew. Even though the separation for rain in the winter and dew in the summer is more relevant to the weather in Israel, it is still relevant to our nature and our connection to Hashem everywhere. The Talmud teaches us that the rain represents the visible influence of Hashem when we pray and ask for something we think we need, and He, hopefully, responds to us. The dew represents a different type of relationship, invisible but crucial. In that relationship, Hashem provides us with what we need, without our asking, even when we aren't aware that we need it and that He is supporting us. That is the nature of this season, the season of the dew, which represents the endless love and support of Hashem.

Best Wishes,
Rabbi Shlomo
